As a matter of fact there are many farm owners that are making a go of it. Nearly 60 percent of the farms of the United States are unmortgaged. Evidently in some way these farm homes are being maintained. The chief difficulty has been that a great many of these farms are owned in too large tracts. The ownership is in the hands of too few people.

I am very anxious for better prices for farm products. They are and have been entirely too low. They have been greatly helped by the various wings of the present farm program, but not to a sufficient degree. The trouble in this connection is that whenever the prices for farm products have been increased land speculation has ensued, tract ownerships have increased, and the tenant problem intensified.

This is no argument against increased farm prices, but it is an argument that both wings of the program should be carried on at the same time. In other words, to increase farm prices and not at the same time to increase the home ownership of family sized farms is neglecting one part of a well-rounded program.

As to the other complaint about the small amount that this amendment would provide, I call attention to the fact that practically all undertakings, both public and private, are on a modest scale at first. Practically all the great industrial institutions of America began in a small way.

Mr. Chairman, what is the thing that has made these countries that have home ownership great countries? What is the basis of their strength? If you will read the history of those countries, I think you will reach but one conclusion.

While, of course, there were other causes, one of the chief sources of the trouble that England and Ireland had for hundreds of years was the vicious land system with absentee landlordism. England finally has undertaken to solve that by having home purchases on 60 years' time instead of 40 years, at 3 percent interest.

A good many of you have heard of the story called the Good Earth. I wondered why it was interesting to so many people. It is the simple story of a Chinaman's life, but you will find that running through it is the great truth that contact with the land builds character, and every time those people came back to the land they would get renewed strength. That is true of national life as well as individual life.

I am going to read you an individual case. I want to read you about the case of Walter Collins, who lives in the district represented by my able colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Walter Collins, who lives 17 miles northwest of Paris, Tex., is now 2 years ahead of his repayment schedule, although the loan is only a year old. He received his farm-purchase loan in December 1938 and paid his first installment last June. Last September he sold some young livestock and made another full year's payment.

His plan of diversified farming brings him an income all the time, so he saved up and made a third annual payment on January 2, only 13 months after receiving the loan.

Although Collins is considered one of the best farmers in Lamar County he was unable in 17 years as a tenant to buy a farm of his own. When Congress made available money for the Farm Security Administration to lend to farmers to buy their own farms, he made application for a loan, and early in 1939 became owner of the 195-acre place he and his family had farmed as tenants for 5 years.

His loan bears only 3-percent interest and payments are amortized over 40 years. Since the first years are the hardest, and Collins has already made 3 years' payments the first year, indications are that he will pay off the loan long before the 40 years are up.

Mr. Chairman, that is an individual case. But what is it that makes America great? What is the divine note that swells the Union and makes of this a mighty Nation respected throughout the world? Up amid the hills of New England, out on the prairies of the West, where they grow corn and wheat and dairy products, and down in the South where cotton is king, are just plain, honest, homespun folks, who deal justly, who serve their country in peace and in war. In those people may be found the foundation stone of our national life and strength.

If you want to find whether a nation will long endure, you will not find it here in Washington where we sometimes have superheated arguments. The Congress and the courts are but the products of the character of a people, the evidence of their progress. But go into the homes of the people; find out how they think, what they do, what they love, what they respect, and you will find the source of that nation's strength.

I would like to be present a few years from now when Walter Collins burns the mortgage on that farm and is a real home owner. I hope the program may be continued until we have a great many more of that type of citizen.

Mr. Chairman, 75 years ago Denmark, realizing what the home ownership of family sized farms meant, began a program like this. She did not solve it the first year; she did not solve it the first 10 years; she did not solve it the first 20 years; but in 75 years she has reached as near a solution as possible, in that more than 95 percent of her people are home owners. New ones are coming along every year and the program has to be continuous. But the strength of those countries is their home-owning, home-loving, home-building people.

There are States in the American Union in which 70 percent are tenants, people who do not have the anchoring strength of a real home. Forty-two percent of the farmers the Nation over are tenants. Can we neglect so grave a problem?

What is the secret of the strength of that great Scandinavian country? Many years ago her people tied on to the land. They began the encouragement of the ownership of small family sized farms. They have builded their nation on home ownership. They have grown strong in that sturdy development.

In the light of their experience, what an opportunity is ours. Search the whole world over and show me a great nation that is inherently strong where the people do not own the land.

We are lending millions to various types of business. We are but making loans to these people. Most of it will be repaid.

We grow used to the precious things of life and they seem commonplace to us. We differ about many things, but we should not differ about fundamental things. I am encouraged by the fact that no one who has spoken against this program has failed to say that he would like to see home ownership increased.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am doing a rather unusual thing, but this is an important issue. I think the chairman of the great Committee on Agriculture is entitled to be heard by all the Members of this Committee. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The Committee will be in order.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not blame the Members of the Committee. We have been here long hours. I would not impose on them if I did not feel so deeply about this matter. But if I am remembered for anything I have done during my service in the House, I hope it will be this legislation. I think it is of great importance, and I hope when we are trying to work out some legislation in the Committee to broaden this and put it on a different basis you will permit the machinery to go on.

I beg the Committee's pardon. [Applause, Members rising.]

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate, as I am sure every Member of this House appreciates, the almost consecrated effort that the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES, the great chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, has made and always makes in the interest of the American farmer or any cause in which he may enlist. [Applause.] I have almost an unbroken record in following him, with the exception, perhaps, of this one thing. He has never brought a measure before this House for the relief of agriculture that I have not supported. Almost without exception he has never advocated action on appropriation items that I have not followed him.

I appreciate also the very deep interest that our beloved Speaker has in this subject. It is a matter that strikes close to him not only because of his great humanitarian impulses, but because of the great need along this line in the particular part of the country from which our Speaker comes.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are other people in the United States who are in distressed circumstances besides the tenant farmers of America. The Budget now being considered by the Congress makes drastic reductions in items that have for their purpose the giving of bread and meat and clothes to hungry American citizens. So necessary is it for us to conserve our national resources and try to reduce appropriations that our great President has said to us that it is necessary to curtail and cut relief appropriations drastically.

All sentiment aside, what is the farm-tenant situation? It is purely a social experiment. It is not relief for distressed agriculture. Not one farthing of this $25,000,000 will go to relieve any distressed and hungry farm tenant who marches in that unhappy band that Steinbeck depicts in The Grapes of Wrath. Not a nickel out of this amount will go to that kind of people.

This program contemplates that the Department of Agriculture go out into 1,290-some counties out of the 3,000 counties in America, with one project in each. In my own district I have 8 agricultural counties, and in my district they contemplate 3 projects, one in each of 3 counties out of my 8 counties.

The gentleman from Texas referred to one Walter Collins. There are many other Walter Collinses in those counties who are toiling and laboring in their effort to eke out a living upon their farms, who do not have a benevolent Federal Government to come and buy a farm and give it to them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. We do not give it to them.

Mr. RANKIN. They pay every nickel of it back.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. They pay every nickel of it back—maybe. What is the situation? Of course, it is desirable that people should be home owners. I wish that tonight every man and woman could have a vine and fig tree that he could call his own. But when your laboring man in your industrial district, and when all the other men besides Walter Collins in that county, want a farm or a home, what do they have to do? When my railroad men or my factory men or my industrial people or my business and professional people want to be home owners, they must go to the Federal Housing Administration or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and apply for a loan, and they do not get the loan unless they can produce satisfactory evidence that they have a job or an income out of which there is a reasonable prospect they can pay for it. And yet what are we asked to do here? At a time when there are hundreds of thousands of farm owners going back down into the farm-tenant class because they cannot make a living on the farm we come with a little program of this kind, purely a social experiment, and undertake to pick a very few, a very small and insignificant number of favored people and set them up, lend them the money, finance them, and give them expert training, in each county in your districts, in competition with every other farmer there who does not have those privileges.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The gentleman will excuse me.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman will remember that I yielded to him at length this morning.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SOUTH. Is it not true that the farmer makes the same showing, and he will be able to pay as much money back, as the city dweller the gentleman mentioned?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. He makes that showing because he is taken under the tutelage and under the patronage and under the protecting wing of the Department of Agriculture.

I will say to the gentleman that if this Government were financially able to do so—if we had any money, and we do not have any money; if we could borrow any, and we cannot borrow any money unless you raise the national-debt limit—such a social experiment might be highly desirable.

It might be very well to go forward with that, but my good friend from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] admitted in his argument yesterday that this is a social experiment, the program is so small, and yet this $25,000,000 in the hands of the Farm Security Administration or W. P. A. would relieve actual distress that does actually exist. I do not see how the Congress can justify going forward with a pure experiment of this kind when there are destitute farmers in America actually in need of meat and bread and shelter and clothing.

My friend from North Carolina asked yesterday if it was not a fact that the farmers of Virginia were having some difficulty. Yes; they are having difficulties, like the farmers everywhere are having difficulties; but the farmers of Virginia, as I know them, long to see the time when they do not have to come asking subsidies from the Federal Government. They long for the day when my good friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] will be able to come to us and make further suggestions as to how we can reach the basic ills of agriculture, how we can stabilize the farmers, if that be possible, so that the farmers may own their farms and may earn their living upon their farms just as the industrial people, the laborers, and the textile workers and the other citizens of the United States.

So I say to you, as desirable, as humanitarian, as philanthropic as this program may be, as much as it may appeal to our sentiments, the time has come when we should not only talk about the old, homespun philosophy of having people own their homes, but there is another homespun philosophy, that old, homespun philosophy—and addressing myself to my democratic colleagues over here particularly—that you and I have boasted of, that men are supposed to support the Government rather than be always looking to have the Government support the men. [Applause.]

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important subject to the large group that I belong to, and I am going to ask unanimous consent to proceed an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, to begin with and to be in line with many others I have heard speak on this subject, I think I should say that I am greatly surprised at this time that the Appropriations Committee would cut the agricultural appropriation or the appropriation which has for its purpose to produce the very sustenance of life upon which all of us must live.

The committee reminds me of a story I have heard of a man who went to buy a pair of trousers. He used money his wife had asked him to use for other purposes and when he returned home and announced he had bought these trousers and that they did not quite fit because they were 2 inches too long, he asked his wife to make the alterations. She was greatly incensed because he had done this and she refused to make the alterations. They had a considerable quarrel about it and he went on to bed and so did she, quite angry at each other. Later in the evening the daughter, who had heard this quarrel, came in and altered the trousers as the husband had requested his wife to do. The mother of the buyer of the trousers, who also had heard the quarrel, and felt her son was being mistreated by his wife, came in, and not knowing about the alteration which the daughter had done, she too proceeded to cut off 2 inches of the trousers, and then the wife, later in the night, when she thought more soberly on what she had said and done, decided she would not be so harsh toward her husband and so she got up and in the quietude of the night, cut off 2 inches of the trousers. Imagine the predicament the gentleman found himself in the next morning when he got up and began to dress himself to go to church. He found his trousers barely touching his knees. [Laughter and applause.] It seems to me this is what the committee has done to our appropriations for agriculture.

Now, why am I so deeply interested in this particular phase of our legislation? I want to say to you that after all has been said and done, the farm holds out to the Negro not only the best chance, but his only chance in the face of the prevailing conditions. The Negroes are not permitted to participate in the manufacturing industries and activities of this country. Between 70 and 80 percent of the 15,000,000 Negroes in this country are on the farms in the South, and I want to tell you that our chances on the farm until recently have been almost hopeless.

Since we have had this new agricultural program I have visited many of the farm resettlement projects in the South. I have visited those sections where farmers have been helped—I mean the members of my own group—and I bring you some figures. I talked with the Secretary of Agriculture about this thing for an hour and a quarter not many weeks ago, and he said to me, "What you are saying is absolutely correct, but" he said, "you cannot persuade the Congress of the United States to make the appropriations so that we can take care of these citizens."

I say again that the hope of 15,000,000 of our citizens is on the farm. It is the duty of this Government that gave us our liberty some 75 years ago and gave us no means by which to go forward and equip ourselves with the other necessities of American citizenship, to look soberly at this matter that we have before us now, before we again close the door in the face of these millions of people of my race who must live on the farms in the South, and if they leave those farms in large numbers they bring to the North a problem that is more aggravating than the problem we have in the South. [Applause.]

Last year when I was making my study of these conditions in the South, I went into seven of the Southern States. I visited Texas. I visited the Carolinas. While other Members of Congress were away on ships making investigations of our interests in other countries, I was in the South making an investigation of the interests of my group particularly. I visited those farm projects. I visited those farmers who have been helped by this program, and I want to tell you what I found on one project in Alabama. It is in the district of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL]. I visited a little tract of land that had been bought by this Government and sold to 34 families of Negroes. The average number of acres sold those families was 58. This project is now 5 years old. When those families went on this project 5 years ago the average worth per family was $4.03. This is absolutely the fact. I have the reports here before me. Four years before I made this investigation the average worth of these 34 families on this farm project was $4.03. When I visited this farm project the average worth per family was more than $1,600. [Applause.] This had been made possible by selecting those families. They were not the ones who had money. The average worth was $4.03 per family, but they were people who wanted an opportunity to work. They have been working under expert farm supervision. They have houses that were erected by funds furnished by the Government. Now they are no longer charges on their communities. They have been established as a definite part of that community in which they live. They are law-abiding citizens. No arrest of any kind had been made on that tract during the 4 years it had existed prior to my visit to that project.

I could name any number of instances where these funds for which we are now asking you have been used to help the farmers in the South, particularly where my group of people live, and in every case where I visited, the farmers have made good. They were paying back the money as it fell due. If we are paying back the money as it falls due, if we are paying some of it back that has not yet fallen due, if we have increased the purchasing power of these people from $4.03 to over $1,600, are you going to say that this is a failure? Are you going to say to my group that has no other source to which it can look for employment, where we can make our own living honestly, "We are going to close the door of hope in your face"? Are you going to balance the Budget no matter how badly it unbalances the lives and closes the door of opportunity to millions of our deserving citizens?

That is the question I want to address to this committee. I have heard arguments made here and I do not take kindly to any of them, that we would balance the Budget at the expense of human misery and suffering. [Applause.]

I hope we will pass this amendment that has been asked for. It is a very modest amendment that has been asked by the chairman of this committee. I hope that we will look carefully to what we are about to do to a large number of our citizens.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. Does it not occur to the excellent representative of his race on this floor that if the people really wish to help the needy Negro in America, instead of passing a meaningless antilynch bill, they will give him some substance, something that will feed the stomach and put clothes on him and help sustain him if he lives, and they will do inestimably more good than making some gesture toward an antilynch bill with no bread behind it?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not want to discuss the antilynch bill now, because that is not pending. But I say if this Congress wants to do something that will help my group of people, there is nothing you could do to help us more than to give us this opportunity to go forward and become useful and helpful and self-supporting citizens in our communities. [Applause.] Then we will stop rushing to New York and to Chicago and Cleveland and Detroit and Washington and becoming objects of charity. Give us a chance on the farm and we will make good. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have been hearing for the last 3 or 4 years that the farming business was a losing business, that the farmers, in order to maintain themselves, must be granted subsidies. If this be true, and it seems to be, why buy more farms and put more men into a losing business? Why do it?

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. I would say that one of the reasons the farmer has had such difficult sledding in my section of the country—

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yielded just for a question, not for a speech.

Mr. SOUTH. First, he has to pay a high rate of interest. The gentleman asked why he was in a losing business and I merely undertook to answer the gentleman's question. I will be brief.

In the first place he has to pay too high a rate of interest. In the second place he has not been given sufficient time in which to pay for his farm. Because of these factors he has been unable to be a home owner.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Conceding that to be true, the fact still remains that farming is a losing business, and Secretary Wallace testified before the Committee on Agriculture that 40,000 farmers were made tenants every year. Why buy more farms and put more men into a losing business when the men owning farms to the number of 40,000 are each year losing their farms because they cannot make expenses?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not now.

Another thing. We have been told that the farmers of the Northwest are trying to remedy the situation by getting parity prices. We have been told that the farmers are not able to sell the crops they now raise at the cost of production. This Congress has appropriated money to buy surplus commodities, surplus crops. Now, if we must use Government money to buy the surplus that the farms already are producing, why put more men on farms to produce more surpluses unless the object be to appropriate more money to buy those surplus crops? Create a vicious circle? A losing business. Putting more men on more farms to raise more and larger crops when already we have to buy the surplus the farms produce because there is no market for what we now produce. Does that make sense? It does not. Why not learn and remove the cause or causes that put farmers out of business each year before we buy more farms on which other men must fail?

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment we are now considering is offered under a bill of which my beloved and distinguished friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is the father, and authorized for the first year an appropriation not to exceed $10,000,000. For the second year, it provided that there could be appropriated not to exceed $25,000,000, and after that, $50,000,000 a year. Acting under this authorization, the Congress in 1938 appropriated $10,000,000; in 1939, $25,000,000, and in 1940 we appropriated $40,000,000. This means that we have appropriated $75,000,000 out of a total of $135,000,000 authorized.

It was intimated a while ago by the gentleman from Virginia that if we passed this appropriation of $25,000,000 we would really be going against the President's program; that we would not be balancing the Budget. I remind you, however, that the Bureau of the Budget approved the item of $25,000,000 which the subcommittee of which I am a member put in the bill, but which was taken out by action of the full committee after about 2 minutes' debate. I say that after this House, having had full discussion of the authorization bill passed the legislation, and when the Budget reduced the appropriation of last year from $40,000,000 to $25,000,000, and when the subcommittee approved the $25,000,000 and placed it in the bill, it seems to me that for the full committee to snatch that item out of the bill was a ruthless action indeed and should be reversed by the Committee of the Whole.

The argument has been made that this legislation is an experiment. Well, if it is an experiment it is one that was entered upon after due consideration and approval by the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. And one that has been eminently successful to date.

Mr. TERRY. This program has been as successful as any program that we have had up to date. It has been said time and time again in this debate that of the money that has been lent thus far in this program, 150 percent of the amount due has been returned, in other words, the farm purchasers are paying back the loan before the installments fall due.

The argument has been made that we can never give farms to all the tenants. We cannot, of course, provide farms for all the tenants, but I call attention to the percentage of increase in the farm tenants of the country. It has been said that farm tenancy is increasing more and more. In 1830 we had a farm tenancy of 25 percent; in 1890, 28 percent; in 1900, 31 percent; in 1910, 37 percent; in 1920, 38 percent; in 1930, the percentage of farm tenants was 42.4 percent. In 1935, it was 42.1 percent. Mr. Chairman, the percentage of farm tenancy is now going down, as is shown by the tables on page 940 of the hearings. At least the percentage of increase has slowed down very materially.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TERRY. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. I may say to the gentleman that I read all of the testimony given before the gentleman's committee and did not see where one witness appeared in opposition. Is that correct?

Mr. TERRY. That is correct.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this committee will adopt this amendment and put back in the bill the $25,000,000 which the Congress has expressly authorized and approved, which was approved by the Budget, and which was placed in the bill by the Subcommittee on Agriculture which had this bill in charge. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, no one is more interested in providing homes for farmers and other citizens than I am, but the futility of this entire program of providing homes for farm tenants goes beyond all stretch of my imagination.

The program referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MITCHELL] a few moments ago as being so eminently satisfactory to a certain group of people was not a program under the farm tenant plan. It was under the Resettlement Administration started by Mr. Tugwell some years ago and it has been thoroughly abandoned and discredited. Even Dr. Alexander, head of the present Farm Security organization, repudiates virtually everything that has been done under the Tugwell resettlement program.

Under the present program 7,000 farm tenants have been taken care of in the United States. That is 7,000 in the last 3 years, during the time the program has been in operation; 7,000 out of 133,000 applications.

The gentleman from Iowa this afternoon asked the question of some one here if the Government was tantalizing the farmers of the country in connection with this program. Yes; I would say the Government is tantalizing 126,000 people who did not secure farms and who had made applications to get in on this free program. There are 126,000 who were not taken care of and we have only provided for 7,000 farm tenants with total appropriations of $75,000,000, all of which will be used up by the end of this present fiscal year.

Mr. NICHOLS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I decline to yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. The gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I decline to yield. The gentleman from Oklahoma generally secures all the time he wants to lecture and scold Members of the majority and minority sides. He may speak in his own time, and I shall be glad to listen to him.

Out of the 7,000 who came in under this program, the payments for only 600 have become due. Sixty-four hundred are not obligated as yet to make any payments. This is taken from the testimony of Dr. Alexander, head of the agency having charge of this program. He said that out of the 600 who have become obligated to make payments this year only 3 percent are delinquent.

Some of the gentlemen who state this program has been a huge success by way of repayments are basing their opinions on a relatively few payments made this year and only a very small amount of them.

Someone asked the question in our committee in the consideration of this legislation about the popularity of the entire program. Why should it not be popular when you can come to the Federal Government, have the Federal Government buy you a farm, put on a new building, fence it, provide you with livestock and cattle so that you can be set up in the farm business without paying 1 red cent down? Why should it not be a popular program?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I decline to yield. I am sure the gentleman from California and every other man who has a desire to go farming will put in his application if he can get a farm free and that is what the program provides. That is why so many people want to get in on it. One hundred and thirty-three thousand people have made applications to get in on the program and only a measly 7,000 have been selected to go on these Government farms.

I want to call your attention to another operation of our Government which is driving farm owners from their homes—making tenants out of them or forcing them on relief. Since January 1, 1934, the Farm Credit Administration has foreclosed on and taken possession of about 85,000 farms, driven these home owners from their homes—made tenants out of them. What is being done for this destitute group of home-loving Americans? Nothing. Our first obligation is to help these fellow citizens retain their homes before we embark upon other experimental programs, however meritorious and beneficial to a few.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I think the Members of the House would probably like to agree on time. I am in no hurry. I am perfectly willing to stay here and let this debate run along. We would like to have the consensus of opinion of the Members as to the time to be consumed in debate. I have no personal interest one way or the other.

If agreeable, I will ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 30 minutes—10 minutes to be allotted by the Chairman to that side of the aisle, 10 minutes to this side of the aisle, and 10 minutes to the Committee to close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the chairman of the subcommittee at the moment is tremendously interested in getting away. Motions have been made that the Committee rise. A very distinguished Member of this House this afternoon has been repeatedly pleading with the chairman of the subcommittee that we quit before we test and wear out the temper of the House, and go over until Monday. The distinguished gentleman from Missouri has repeatedly refused to agree to such an arrangement. I see many Members on the floor of the House standing at this time, and I presume they want to be heard on this amendment. I also presume, Mr. Chairman, that they have equal rights in the House of Representatives to those of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. The gentleman from Oklahoma is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request. I shall be glad to stay as long as anybody desires to talk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I seldom find myself in disagreement with the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], whom I believe to be one of the ablest Members of this Congress. I subscribe wholeheartedly to the doctrine he announced a moment ago, that the people themselves should support their Government. I subscribe wholeheartedly to the theory we should adopt and put into practice a sound fiscal policy for this Nation, but I also subscribe to the doctrine that the Government of the United States was established for the purpose of giving protection to the weak and to provide for the general welfare. While it is the duty of those of us who are able to give it support by paying taxes and by bearing arms to do so, it is also the duty of the Government to give support to the needy, the distressed, the weak, and the defenseless who are not able to care for themselves. [Applause.]

I am deeply interested in the welfare of the underprivileged and the low-income groups of America. I am anxious that insofar as it is possible for us to do so we shall provide for their general welfare and promote a better and a happier citizenship by increasing their income. If we can lend money to the railroads to carry on legitimate business enterprises, if we can subsidize a merchant marine, and we are doing it under our present Budget to the tune of millions of dollars, I say that we can also lend money upon proper security and good character to men who are worthy of becoming home owners and taxpayers, as is provided under the Farm Tenant Act. I, therefore, rise at this time to support the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. This is not a gift but a loan which has proven sound in that the payments have been made. It is not a gift of any kind.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Absolutely. This is not a gift but a loan upon security, land security and character security, and the loan will eventually be paid back to the Federal Government.

This is a deserving program. This is a program which cares for a deserving class of people in the United States. If we are to balance the Budget, and we must, let us find items that are less deserving than this. Let us look into and carefully scrutinize other expenditures and make our cuts in Budget items where they will not work harm to the low-income group of America, or work harm to legitimate enterprise, or to a program that will promote love for home and country and build a better and a more stable citizenship.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. Is it not a fact that a sound loan will not put the Budget further out of balance? This is a loan, not an outright gift or grant.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The gentleman is correct, and that is one of the reasons why I am supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

I take great pride in the fact that the first bill I introduced as a Member of this House was a farm-tenant bill, in 1935, and that I took some small part in the passage of the farm-tenant bill which is now on the statute books.

I sincerely hope that the Members of this House will give further encouragement to this splendid long-range program to eradicate farm tenancy which will eventually convert us from a country of tenants and sharecroppers to a land of home owners, free, happy, and self-sustaining. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether or not you realize it but in my district I have some of the tenants that you of the South are speaking about. I do not know who is to blame because they have not received these loans but I will say to you, frankly, that although we had an allotment of over $337,000 to the State of Wisconsin, only 42 loans were made there in 1939, and none in my district.

I have in my district two counties, in one of which over 30 percent of the people are on relief, and in the other over 60 percent of them are on relief. The Government has gone in and bought property in these counties and made it into a forest, and left the balance of the citizens of the county to pay the taxes to run the government of these counties and also to take care of the bonds on the good roads the Government found when they took over the land.

Something has been said here about lending money to the farmers. I listened yesterday to what I think was one of the most profound addresses I have ever listened to in my life, delivered by the distinguished gentleman from Texas. Ever since I have been here in this House I have been conscious of one thing, and that is that we are centralizing government here in Washington. Anyone who wants anything any place in the United States has to come to Washington to get it. That is all wrong.

They talk about money for business.

That is fine, but you know we have in the bank today $5,590,000,000 in reserves that the people of this country can borrow back home if you can select the borrowers like you are selecting them under this present law. I do not think there is any bank that would refuse any of these good farmers a loan provided, of course, they were properly selected as they have been under this law and put on farms.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNS. I cannot yield because I have only 5 minutes and the gentleman is going to talk, anyway.

There is no reason for people in any community not being able to borrow money, because the banks are full of money. They are trying to find loans for good people and, of course, if you can pick out the best tenant in the county who may have lost his farm because he was foolish enough to buy it at a time when he had to pay high prices for it and then lost it under a mortgage, he can go back to the same county and find plenty of farms to buy in that community on which the Government has loaned money. I have one in mind particularly where the Government made a loan of $10,000. The taxes and the interest accumulated until they amounted to $13,000. The Government then sold it for $3,000 and lost $10,000 on the loan. That man, of course, could go if you selected him, and had somebody tell him just what to do and succeed, but the people in each community that need these loans are people that do not know very much about farming and those people you have to help, and you have that situation in many communities today, but you cannot go around with $29,000,000, and make the farmers of this country prosperous.

I have listened to the talks here about helping the farmers. I want you gentlemen on this floor to understand that I think I know something about the farmers, especially in my State, and if anybody sits around here and thinks that you are fooling them with this handout to them, I tell you you are all wrong, because you are not fooling them. I said to these people last fall in visiting with them. "You take every dollar that the Government will give you, because it is probably the last handout you are going to get, and you are going to have to help pay this back," and that is the truth.

I want to tell you right now it is time we quit this handout to the farmer and let him go back to where he can run his own farm and take care of himself and then give him some protection from imports of foreign farm products which he can produce himself from being imported into this country. Then he will get along all right. [Applause.]

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have not engaged in the debate on this bill, although I have served on the Appropriations Committee. I think every man is entitled to his point of view, and I do not question the point of view of any other man, or his sincerity. Everything in life is a matter of relative importance, and I desire to speak frankly to this Committee today, not questioning the value of the Farm Tenancy Act, not questioning many of the good things in the bill, but merely from my own standpoint to try to put them in the place where I think they belong.

We have appropriated in this bill $785,000,000 for the farmer. There is certainly no lack of interest in that group when we have made such a liberal contribution.

Someday soon America must be told the truth in plain language so that it will be understood. Unless we learn to live within our income, national disaster, in my opinion, is inevitable. We are closing our eyes to this fact and we are cajoling ourselves with hope and an unwillingness to look the situation in the eye. In my opinion we must deal now with realities before it is too late. You cannot solve the approaching crisis by ignoring it. Our country must understand quickly that the only way to avoid a national catastrophe and loss of that which has made America the last barrier of liberty in this world is to deny ourselves even to the point of suffering. We are spoiled in this country by a lavish extravagance. It is better now to endure a little than to fail to face the facts and suffer a thousand times more in the future, and I believe this very sincerely.

Who can foretell the human misery and the effect upon our way of living if uncontrolled inflation comes? What would happen tomorrow if lack of faith in our capacity to govern ourselves would be evident to a majority of our people; if Government bonds would drop to 85; if our monetary system were to be thrown into confusion, and our media of exchange would be of doubtful value? The answer would be an iron hand directing a strong, centralized force, or what is worse, chaos. In either case, democracy and liberty would be "gone with the wind"; and this disaster is not only a probable result of our failure to govern ourselves by not living within our means, but it is almost inevitable unless Congress will now lead the people to sacrifice many governmental benefactions. I do not believe it is too late if we are willing to tell the truth to our people and call upon them to assist in a public duty to sacrifice for our country. Self-denial and courage can save us intense suffering in the future and the people must be made to understand the true situation now. In the interest of our children, that they may live in the America we have known, we should do this now.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kentucky may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. I appreciate that very much.

We cannot avert disaster simply by trimming appropriations. We must go further than just to reduce unnecessary expenditures. Even this year, with all the trimming that has been done by the Budget, we are almost $2,000,000,000 beyond our income. We the people must want less, accept less, from our Government, and we as Members of Congress must dare to abolish many governmental activities which may be good and serve a useful purpose, but are not imperatively required for the very essentials of life.

I wish it were possible, personally, to have a 5-year moratorium on spending, where only the direst necessities would be appropriated for. But this year, in this and in all appropriation bills, let us reduce expenditures by unprecedented amounts, and when we tell our people why I have confidence that they will approve. If we do not begin now to cut to the bone, some day in the not too distant future we will be forced to vote reductions that will make these cuts seem to be very small indeed. We cannot afford to postpone the day for action. We must proceed with the greatest of economy. In this bill, with almost $800,000,000 for the farmer, there is nothing in the way of emergency in this amendment. There is nothing that will cause suffering if we do not vote for it. We should recognize this as a good thing, but something that can be deferred and put off to a brighter day. If we can place our country again on a sound foundation we have benefited in the finest way the farmer and all the people.

I trust that when we vote on every measure in this bill, and on all bills, we will be honest and recognize the condition of our country, and cut out not only the things that are not necessary, but many good things we can do without. [Applause.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the next word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take more than a minute. I find on page 962 of the hearings the number of farm tenants that there are in the United States. That number is 2,865,155. By the simple process of arithmetic, multiplying that by $5,000, you will find that the total loanable amount to all farm tenants is $14,325,775,000. That is the total amount that would be loaned if all tenants were to be loaned $5,000 each toward the purchase of a farm.

It seems to me that this program, if it is going to be a program of the Federal Government, had better be something a bit different than a drop in the bucket like $25,000,000. You had better go in for something like three or four billion dollars and really put on a program.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me add to what the gentleman has said, that it would take $14,000,000,000 to take care of all the tenants in this country. Furthermore, since January 1, 1934, the Farm Credit Administration, a Federal institution, has foreclosed and taken 85,000 farms from the farm home owners in this country, and they are attempting to solve the problem in this program where they have only taken care of 7,000 in the past 3 years.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, in the several years this program has been in effect, 6,180 loans have been made. In California only 39 loans have been made and these 39 loans average $8,127. Three of these loans were for more than $10,000 each. That is pretty good going but the first thing to do is to correct things so that farmers who are having a hard time to hang on can succeed.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made today and include therein a contribution from the gentleman from Nebraska, Congressman STEFAN, who resigned his time to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, any consideration of this farm-tenant program which approaches the question from the standpoint of balancing the Budget is, in my opinion, on entirely false grounds. I say that not because I do not believe in balancing the Budget, but I say it because if a bank makes a sound loan to a borrower, the bank does not conceive that its "budget" has been unbalanced thereby. I submit that any system of bookkeeping that causes a Government lending agency to have to look upon a sound loan that it makes from a different standpoint from what a private bank would look upon it, has something wrong with it. As a matter of fact, what we are considering here is simply the question whether we want to continue on a very small scale a program of turning farm tenants into farm owners or whether we do not. Now, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] made this remark. He said he had hoped the time would come when this program might be of sufficient scope to really solve this problem. Most of the Members have heard me speak before on this same subject, but I am simply going to say this: The question of the reserves in the banks was mentioned. The reserves of the United States Government are far greater than those reserves; and if the day ever comes when this Nation becomes free to use its credit on the basis of its reserves, then we could make possible loans to farm tenants on proper assurance of repayment of many times $25,000,000, and we would know when we did it that we were not unbalancing the Budget by a single dime.

Now, the question has been raised about centralization of power in Washington.

This program is administered by local committees and local communities, and they are the people who really make the decisions. I believe this is right. Certainly it is not centralization of power.

The point has been made also this afternoon that the Government should not support the people but that the people should support the Government. I agree, of course, but I want to point out to you that it is nations like those of Scandinavia and like France, nations with the greatest number of independent family farm owners, which are today the nations with probably the most admirable civilization in all the world save only our own. And who, may I ask, supports the Government half so sturdily as the farm owners of the Nation? I ask you to remember that if there was one factor more important than any other in the destruction of the civilization of Rome and of the many other great empires of the past, that factor was the destruction of the small farmer and the fact that the nation stood idly by and watched him lose his independence and lose the ownership of the land that he worked. What we are trying to do here is stem that tide in America and turn it in the other direction.

The trouble with this amendment is that it provides only $25,000,000 of loans at 3 percent to farmers. I believe every farm loan in America ought to be refinanced at not more than 3 percent interest.

Mr. Chairman, we are going to be asked from time to time to authorize—indeed we already have authorized—vast amounts in the form of loans to industrial enterprises, and nobody even raises a question about the Budget. We may be asked to make loans to foreign countries, and nobody will raise a question about the Budget. We will be told that these are loans, not expenditures. Why, then, is it not possible for loans to farm tenants to be handled on the same basis? That is the real question. And may I point out this also, Mr. Chairman, that you must remember that in the case of loans where the repayment results have been as excellent as in this case, that to a certain extent if you fail to make available this money for these loans you then cut the income of the Government in future, and there is no reason, with a rational view of what the credit of the United States really is, why you should not make loans at 3 percent, or at 2 percent, to worthy farmers for these purposes and more than balance the account. [Applause.]

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I want to spend a few minutes this evening talking about the real agricultural problem.

THE REAL AGRICULTURAL PROBLEM

The objects of this program are desirable. The most important and the most pathetic agriculture picture today is not the tenant farmer, but the farmer and the farm family that has worked and slaved to obtain a farm, get it partly paid for, and then lose it through adverse weather conditions and low farm prices. This is the class of people that should be given every opportunity to have reappraisals and other necessary measures to help him keep his farm and his home. Do you know how many farmers have lost farms in your district through foreclosures?

Why should the present farm owner lose his farm, be pushed onto the W. P. A. and relief rolls, without having consideration before any program that makes farm owners out of non farm owners with a 100-percent subsidy of the United States Treasury? In other words, we cannot set up new farm owners without providing funds to take care of the present landowners.

I believe in a program that will increase the number of farm owners.

I also believe in a set-up that gives each man equal opportunities.

If one more dollar is appropriated to help farm credit situations, let us begin, first, by having all farm mortgages carry equal interest rates, otherwise we will scuttle the Federal Land Bank. We cannot in fairness continue to have some mortgages with 3 percent for 40 years, with a 100-percent loan; and others with 4- to 6-percent interest, for 10, 20, or 30 years, and only a 50-percent loan.

Second. Let us quit foreclosing distress loans and taking farms from people who are in distress due to low agricultural prices and adverse weather conditions.

Third. Let us quit buying big tracts of land, subdividing them, building costly new buildings, as long as a family-sized farm that will support a farmer and family under normal agricultural conditions can be bought for less than the cost of new buildings.

Fourth. Let us quit buying hundreds of $10,000 to $12,000 farms for nonfarm owners, when this money will take care of double the number of farms.

Fifth. Let us quit buying special farms costing up to $225 per acre, and obtain more farms that cost from $3,000 to $4,000 at the present time.

Sixth. Let us forget the Russia-like community programs, with the paternalistic spirit that accompanies it, and carry on this program on a common-sense family-sized farm as a unit.

Seventh. Let us see that the first 50 percent of any moneys appropriated is used first to give immediate help to the farm owner of today who is in distress through low farm prices and adverse weather conditions.

Eighth. I sympathize with the Members here that live in districts with 60 percent tenants, but in fairness and justice, you must give just consideration to the present farm owners of America. As long as the farmer has a 79-cent dollar, it is futile to start up new farms. Let us wait until the present farmers get parity before we put more men in competition with him. The question, gentlemen, is not only whether we are going to turn tenants into farm owners, but whether we should adopt a program that keeps us from making tenants out of farm owners. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. RANKIN. To speak on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak particularly to the gentlemen on the Republican side. You are continuously expressing concern about the destiny of this Republic and about the dangers that threaten it. The greatest thing that we can do to save this Republic is to rebuild the rural homes of America and to make it possible for the farmers to own them.

You would think, to hear some Member speak, that this is a dole; that this is money given to the tenant farmers. This is money lent to them at reasonable rates of interest that they may buy homes and gradually pay for them.

Some people would have you believe that all tenant farmers in the South are Negroes, or that they are a shiftless class of people who do not want to own anything. That is a mistake. There are thousands, there are millions, of good white people throughout the country who, if they could do so, would own their homes.

You gentlemen are always praising the great founder of your party, Abraham Lincoln. His parents never owned a home. They were tenant farmers. He lived as a farm tenant and had to go from place to place in order to get land to work or work to do. We are trying to make it possible for everyone in America who wants to do so, who has the get-up, the industry, and the determination to own a home, to be able to buy one and pay for it.

For the first time in the history of our country we are now able to carry to the farm home the same conveniences that we have in the city. Our rural-electrification program is tying farmers to their homes and enabling them to live there with a greater degree of satisfaction and contentment than they have ever known before.

You may defeat this amendment, but if you do, then do not go out and parade among the farmers as the friends of the people who till the soil.

This program, if carried out, will build homes in America. It will build farm homes, in which these men may live, men on whom the future of this Republic must depend. There may be some things that have gone wrong, but you have not shown where there was a single nickel lost on a single one of these farms that have been purchased by a man who wanted to own his own home. I know some farmers are losing their homes. Why? Because they are overcharged in interest rates, and they are not given the proper consideration when they meet with adversity.

This is the only program that has ever afforded those people money at an interest rate they could afford to pay. It is a program for the rebuilding of America. If you want to vote this down and take the money and give it to men who do not want to own their own homes, as was suggested, then you may do so. But when it is spent it will be gone and he will have nothing to show for it.

What we are trying to do is encourage men with pride, men with industry and self-respect to purchase and own their own homes in which to rear the future citizens of America. There is not a provision in this bill that is of more importance than this Jones amendment. It will bring permanent, lasting benefits to these people and add to the wealth as well as the strength of the Nation. I sincerely trust that you will vote for the pending amendment. Let us carry on this program to provide homes for the future farmers of America. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COLE of Maryland). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. POAGE] is recognized.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, may I direct your attention to the inconsistent attitude of this House. We report out something, pass something, tell the farmers of the Nation that we are going to do great things for them; then just when they reach the time when they can reasonably expect to have delivery on those promises that we made, we come into this House and say, "Oh, no; it is true we promised that years ago, but we cannot fulfill our promises—not to the farmer."

Did it ever occur to the Members of this House that an obligation you make in the name of the United States Government should be just as binding on you as an obligation that you make in your own name? Did it ever occur to you that as a representative of a great government it does not improve the standing of our Government with the people at home, who make up the Government, when we turn around and fail to carry out these obligations? Do you think for one moment that the struggling farmer back home will ever accept your logic when you tell him, "No; I could not make this appropriation for which I voted an authorization a few years ago."

I want to pause right here to observe that there are Members on the Republican side of the aisle who voted for these authorizations right along, who voted for the Agricultural Adjustment Act holding out hope to the farmers of America that they would be given a constructive program and that they would receive something approaching parity. You now come along and say: "Oh, no; I cannot do that. I cannot carry out the program I supported because the Democratic President and the Democratic Budget committee does not recommend it."

Are you bound by those recommendations? And I want to ask the Members on this Democratic side of the House, Are you bound by the recommendations of the President? Are you the Congressman elected from your district or is your district represented by a clerk down in the Budget Bureau? Who is to determine what is good for your people? "Oh," you say, "I must follow the Budget." I have heard that all afternoon.

I heard the distinguished gentleman from Virginia talking about how we must follow the Budget. I heard that discussion when we were called upon to deny the farmers of America anything approaching a parity price. Oh, yes, it is true that after promising our farmers great things, large increases in prices if they would reduce their acreage, we are now telling them: "You have reduced your acres, it is true but we cannot appropriate a dollar to make the payments we promised you, because the Budget did not recommend it." That may be fine, but I do not follow the idea. I do not feel obligated to do what the Budget tells me to do. I believe it is well to go along and have a cooperative administration as far as possible, but I do not believe that anybody else is charged with the duty of legislating for the Eleventh District of Texas. I am the only Representative elected from that district, and you are the only Representative elected from your district, and the responsibility is yours and mine.

However, you say, "I must follow the Budget." All right, Mr. Chairman, if we must follow the Budget, then let us follow it. Let us follow it all the way through. Let us not go along with the President and the Budget only a part of the way. If we are to hide behind someone else, let us go all the way. Have my friends read the Budget recommendation of $25,000,000 for this Jones-Bankhead tenancy work? Have my friends read the recommendation of the President of the United States? Have my friends read the President's message this afternoon? Do the members of this committee realize that the Budget Bureau recommended the appropriation contained in this amendment? Do you know that within the last few hours the President of the United States has expressed the belief that the Appropriations Committee had made a very serious mistake in cutting this bill below $900,000,000? Such, my friends, is the statement carried in today's late afternoon paper.

The appropriation contained in this amendment is approved by the President; it is carried in the Budget; the policy has been approved by this House time and again; the money has been promised to the tenant farmers of the country; it is needed; it is a loan, not a gift. Let us keep faith and vote for this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I wonder if we cannot get an agreement at this time on the length of this debate?

Various Members rose.

Mr. RAYBURN. How many Members have asked for time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has on his list 12 names now.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my remarks.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, on yesterday the distinguished gentleman from Virginia criticized the statement issued to the press by the Secretary of Agriculture. Today, in an effort to defeat farm tenancy, during the course of his address he pointed to the fact that the President was economy-minded and thought that governmental expenditures should be curtailed.

If the gentleman from Virginia may be pardoned for his reference to the President, I hope I may likewise be pardoned for my reference to a statement which he today issued in Hyde Park, not with regard to general expenditures by the Government but with regard to the particular bill now under discussion.

I have in my hand the 5:30 issue of the Evening Star, and under a date line from Hyde Park the following appears:

President Roosevelt told reporters in firm tones today he was standing on his Budget and a $900,000,000 agricultural appropriation for the year beginning July 1.

He said the House Appropriations Committee, which slashed the farm appropriations bill 20 percent below Budget estimates, had made perfectly terrific cuts. The bill is pending in the House.

Volunteering to discuss the agricultural appropriation at a press conference in the library of his home here, Mr. Roosevelt said he saw no reason why some excerpts from his Budget address should not be reprinted.

He had some excerpts typed out, and he read them to newsmen. They said:

"I have carefully checked the individual estimates under these broad categories, and I am satisfied that no lower figures can be attained except at the expense of impairing the efficiency with which laws are administered or of working undue hardship upon individuals or economic groups. I refuse to accept the responsibility of adopting either alternative."

Another quotation:

We must not only guard the gains we have made, but we must press on to obtain full employment by those who have been displaced by machines, as well as for the 5,000,000 net addition to the labor force since 1929.

This is the language of the President—

We must therefore avoid the danger of too drastic or too sudden a curtailment of Government support.

President Roosevelt made this further statement:

I do not believe that the majority of people feel that the agricultural program should be reduced below the figure of $900,000,000, because this figure, in itself a large reduction below the current year, will be barely sufficient to carry out soil-protection and surplus-removal operations.

In view of that statement by the President, in view of the recommendation by the Budget Bureau, and in view of the fact that the House, the Senate, and the President have gone on record time and again favoring a farm-tenancy program, I appeal to the members of the Committee not to repudiate this program at this time.

I regard this program as an experiment, a noble and a worthy experiment. I do not feel that that group of citizens, the tenant farmers of this country, who are helpless, who are unorganized, who have no one to speak for them other than their duly elected Representatives in this Congress, should be sacrificed and this experiment now be cast into the dump heap. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, although the hour is late, and although I know Members would like to get away, I feel it impossible for me to apologize for taking this time, because I was one of those who were willing to quit earlier this afternoon and take this matter up on Monday morning. Too, I take very little of the time of the House in debate on this floor, despite the statement of my distinguished friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] to the contrary notwithstanding.

I doubt that it is necessary to appeal to the Members of the House who are familiar with the tenant problem in this country. I am sure it is necessary to convince gentlemen who represent urban districts that this is a worthy cause, and I should like to call their attention to the fact that in the same session of Congress that we appropriated $10,000,000 to start the tenant program as an experiment, if it must be that, we appropriated $700,000,000 for slum clearance in the United States.

If there be those among you who doubt that we have slums off the pavement and at the forks of the creek, the same as you have in the cities, then I say to you that you are wrong. It just so happens, too, that the men and the women who are attempting to take a living from the soil in rural sections of the United States, tenants though they be, are American citizens. They contribute as much to the growth of this Nation as do your constituents who reside on the pavement and in the alleys this Congress has so generously appropriated money to clear and clean out.

I wish I could take you with me down into Oklahoma and other States like Oklahoma and show you the condition that exists there. Maybe this is the wrong tack. Maybe, as is proposed by bills now pending before the Committee on Agriculture, of one of which I am the author, we will have to transfer the basic principles of the Federal Housing Administration to a rural program. I believe that is the solution, to use private funds and public credit. But it is just as important that this job be done, if only in a small way, for the farmer as it is that you do the job, if only in a small way, for the slum dweller in the city.

This appropriation will not break the Government and the Budget. Why, the Budget is the thing that flew up and hit me in the face a few minutes ago when I was attempting to get $3,000,000 to carry on and make operative the soil conservation program.

The chairman of the subcommittee who is handling this bill said, "Why, the gentleman from Oklahoma does not want to go against the wishes of the Budget, does he?" Well, I did at the moment. Now I find the chairman of the same committee willing to throw out of the window and count for nought the opinion of the Budget because the Budget placed in this bill $25,000,000 for this purpose which the Appropriations Committee cut out, and I want to point out another thing, when we gave you $700,000,000 for slum clearance, we also gave you a subsidy. [Applause.]

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, to any of you who are somewhat impatient, I would like to remind you that we are not here at this late hour because we want to be, but it is the only opportunity we have to discuss a problem that we consider very vital.

I grew up, in a measure, with the farm-tenancy proposition. I think I know something about it. I advocated a farm-purchase program before I came to Congress and before this law was ever passed. I have seen the Government during the past few years shovel money into various States and communities when I realized that it was not anything more than a shot in the arm. I have hoped and prayed that some program would be adopted which would finally prove to be a sound solution of the farm problem. I am sincere when I say to you that I do not know of any approach which we have made thus far except the present farm program.

Let us analyze it briefly. There now exists in this country from 60 to 70 percent farm tenancy. The present program has been to buy farms averaging 134 acres each at a cost of $5,395 each. There is only 2 percent delinquency at this time. There has been paid back to the Federal Government approximately 50 percent more money than is due up to this time. To those of you who talk so much about a balanced Budget, why do you not jump on the items of a half a billion or a billion dollars outright appropriations instead of a mere little $25,000,000 loan?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to call attention to the fact that both parties in the platform of 1936 proposed this kind of legislation. I will read from the Republican platform:

We propose to provide for ample farm credit at rates as low as those enjoyed by other industries, and preference in land loans to the farmers acquiring or refinancing a farm as a home.

Mr. SOUTH. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I want to say to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] I do not blame him for not yielding when he was discussing that case. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that those loans bore 5½ and 6 percent interest, and if some of them were not callable in as short a time as 5 years?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. They had longer terms to run, but the interest ran up to 4½ and 5 percent.

Mr. SOUTH. And did not the treasurer also abscond with $235,000 of that money?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. SOUTH. I want to ask the gentleman also if the money was not used for various and sundry other purposes than the purchase of farm homes?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No. It was used for the refinancing of farm loans.

Mr. SOUTH. It was used for refinancing, but not for purchasing. That is not the same thing. It was not used for purchases.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Some refinancing.

Mr. SOUTH. And is it not a further fact that a lot of it was used to bail out some banks, and it was not an honest-to-goodness farm-purchase program? Does not the gentleman think this is a better program than the South Dakota program?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think there are some safeguards in the selection of the risks, but at the same time the first letter I had in support of this program came from a banker who wanted to sell a farm.

Mr. SOUTH. I do not yield any further.

In closing I would like to say the President of the United States is for this. The Budget is for it. The subcommittee which heard the testimony is for it. The Department of Agriculture wants it. The farmers of this country need it. Now, who is opposed to it?

I do not understand how you can cry out about an unbalanced budget when you are dealing with a $25,000,000 loan. You same men are going to vote over $2,000,000,000 appropriation for armaments. Perhaps we need it, but that is what puts the Budget out of balance. It is not the $25,000,000 that you are lending the little farmer that he may take his young wife and baby into a home that he can call his own and be self-supporting. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, without denying anyone all the time he desires for debate, I wonder how long it will be before the Committee is ready to vote?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair has nine names remaining on the list.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, I know the hour is late, and I will take but a very few minutes.

A few days ago it was reliably reported to me that a recent sale of 3-percent long-term bonds of the Farm Credit Administration brought enough premium so that the buyers of the bonds would realize less than 1½-percent interest. Money is cheap when credit is highly rated. There are, however, millions of farm people who cannot get any credit because they cannot establish such rating.

I have for some time been convinced that this Congress ought to devise some way to take the burden of at least three Government activities from the Appropriations Committee, making them recipients of Federal loans furnished their operating agencies on the security which their operations make it possible to give. I have reference to the Farm Tenant Act as administered by the Farm Security Administration, the Rural Electrification Administration, and the purchase of timber lands by the Forest Reservation Commission. It has seemed to me that this Congress ought to provide for the organization of a department in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation which would furnish money for these three governmental activities the same as money is furnished for the railroads.

The day of cheap interest is here, and it is our duty to see that it is passed on to such worthy enterprises as rural electrification, purchase of land for tenants so they may become permanent landowners, and completion of cutting circles for our lumber mills so their operations may become permanent on the selective-logging plan. With 1½-percent interest prevailing, it looks as if this Government ought to furnish these three activities all the money that can be used, at even less than 3 percent, and have a sufficient margin to cover all losses. I would give money to these agencies at the same rate the railroads are paying, which, I understand, is 2¼ percent annual interest.

I am truly alarmed at the constant necessity of selling Government bonds to take up the excessive spending far above amounts collected by the Government. We are soon going to reach a time when Government bonds will fall, and if they fall in price it will seriously threaten our whole economic fabric. I distinctly remember when I sold Government bonds for 85 cents on the dollar. I believe that if Government bonds should fall to that price today, it would break many banks and bring economic chaos worse than that of March 1933. It has been stated that under the present "managed plan" the bonds of the Government of the United States will not fall in price. Acting under what is called open-market operations, the Federal Reserve Board buys Government bonds, paying for them with currency. To me this is a doubtful and dangerous method of supporting Government credit. Certainly there can be no objection to removing every danger of strain upon the Federal Treasury and upon our national credit.

This amendment for $25,000,000 is a relatively small matter in comparison to the total. It is not going to solve the farm problem—just rubbing a little more salve on a serious wound—just another shot in the arm. We can do something really constructive by transferring the financing of these activities from the Treasury and supplying money through the sale of long-term bonds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Behind such bonds will be the security of all the farm lands sold. The Treasury would then be relieved of the strain of direct appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] for 5 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to follow the distinguished Democrat, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], who made a wonderful speech in opposition to this pending amendment. I remember, with a national debt of $25,000,000 when we returned from fighting the World War, which we were told was to make the world safe for democracy, that the 4½-percent Government bonds which we purchased out of our $1.25 a day overseas pay in an unsupported, unpegged market brought but 84 cents on the dollar. Now we have a rapidly mounting national debt which has almost reached $42,000,000,000 and, in addition, about $6,000,000,000 of other obligations which the Government of the United States has guaranteed. We have also had a several-billion-dollar annual deficit for many years. The Federal Government has been spending $2 for every dollar of revenue collected. The portfolios of the insurance companies, the banks, and various trust funds are now loaded far beyond the saturation point with low-interest-bearing Government bonds. Most of these bonds carry 2 percent and 3 percent interest rates instead of the 4½-percent rate of the bonds which brought only 84 cents on the dollar when our national debt was but $25,000,000,000. If we continue this drunken New Deal orgy of spending $2 for every $1 collected in revenues much longer, the time will soon be at hand when the Federal Government will be bankrupt and our people will suffer from the devastating effects of resulting inflation.

Our American dollar will then be about as worthless as the many billions of inflated German marks and Russian rubles which I have. Mr. Chairman, if you study the history of those nations which were plunged into bankruptcy and inflation by reason of loose fiscal policies such as those followed by the New Deal for 7 long years you will find that inflation brings almost as much suffering, misery, distress, despair, and chaos as does a major war of invasion.

The expenditures provided in this amendment are asked in the name of the distressed farmer. Several hundred thousand farmers are being forced off their farms each year. Each year the New Deal forecloses and takes away the farms of many thousand farmers. The $25,000,000 carried in this amendment, to use your own figures, will provide farms for only 5,000 favored people, and many millions of tenant farmers, so far as hoping to receive benefits from this bill are concerned, have about as much chance of receiving them as they would have of winning a dollar if they bought an Irish sweepstakes ticket. This bill will not even take care of a small percentage of the farmers whose loans were foreclosed and farms taken away from them by the New Deal.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I must respectfully decline to yield, because I have so little time.

We were reminded this afternoon that the President of the United States back in 1932 talked about the dangers of a loose fiscal policy when he bitterly denounced and condemned the expenditures of the Federal Government, which totaled less than $4,500,000,000. For the past 7 years the President and his New Deal tribe have spent more than $9,000,000,000 a year. We hear the President quoted on the floor of the House today in favor of the pending amendment. A message to Congress from the President is not quoted, but a newspaper release from his palatial Hyde Park, N. Y., mansion.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. In just a moment.

If there are so many million people who need farms in America, why take a paltry $25,000,000 to provide farms for only 5,000 and antagonize the rest of the 3,000,000 farmers, who will want you to explain why you did not give them a farm and $5,000 to operate it? I would suggest that if the President wants this amendment in order to play Santa Claus to 5,000 farmers, that he subdivide the many-thousand-acre plantation he owns in Georgia and give farms to those who want them, and ask his many multimillionaire New Deal liberals, such as Barney Baruch, Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Interior Mr. Harold Ickes, and the fattest calf of them all, multimillionaire Jimmy "Doris Duke" Cromwell, to lend the money to stock the farms in the farm-security way.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the pending amendment will be defeated, because it is unsound and discriminatory and will put an additional $25,000,000 burden on our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that when debate is concluded the committee may have 10 minutes in which to close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, it is a great pleasure to address this political convention. [Laughter.] I think I am entitled to a careful hearing because this afternoon when I was given a half minute through the generosity of the pilots of this bill I yielded back part of that time.

I do not know whether I can use the superlative in classifying this bill as the most important bill that will be presented for the consideration of this Congress or not, but I do believe it is one of the most important bills. In fact, I know it is from the standpoint of the common man down in the southwest Plains region.

A great deal has been said here by Members who are just as conscientious and probably more so than I am about the danger of inflation and about undermining the confidence of this Government and its finances if we go ahead and build up some farm homes. I do not take much stock in the fellow who is always wanting to tear out and run to a bank for advice when a question of this kind comes up. We have got to work for something more than a banker. I have no objection to bankers, railroad men, or anybody else, but I will tell you what I do insist on. I think the man who tills the soil, digs down into the ground, and tries to make the food and fiber to feed and clothe America, who is trying to take care of his family, ought not to be kicked out of the window. [Applause.]

Is it necessary and would it be a good thing for this Congress to carry on this appropriation with which to buy homes for people throughout the Union? Do we need them? I want to give it to you as my best opinion from my observation that if there was ever a time in the history of this Republic when we needed to establish homes throughout the length and breadth of this land, now is the time. When you establish homes you build an altar. Do you think we need those altars? Religion has almost disappeared from the face of the earth, and when you take it from under the foundation of this country you have not got so very much left. Not only do you build that altar which is the only fit place as a repository for the ark of the covenant of this Republic of free people, but you also build in it a citadel for the protection of our own Government and of its institutions.

Why do you not want to build them? Why do you not want to give assistance to those people if you expect this Government to continue to go forward and to remain a great Nation as it is today? Why should we not do it? Why should we let the bugaboo of cheap money keep us from doing those things which we know we should do? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago there was a motion made to limit debate and the question was asked how many Members desired to speak? I know I spoke loud enough in stating I wanted to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Chair has the gentleman's name very conspicuously on his list.

Mr. DUNN. A motion was made. I thought it was a unanimous-consent request, and now I find out it is a motion. Does that deprive me of the right to speak?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate has been limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from Missouri a few minutes ago submitted a unanimous-consent request that the Committee be given 10 minutes at the termination of all debate. Now he makes a motion that debate close in 10 minutes. My parliamentary inquiry is this: Does his later motion supersede the unanimous-consent request?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the parliamentary situation debate is limited to 10 minutes, and under the unanimous-consent request the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the motion I made by allowing 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], and 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK], in addition to the 10 minutes which has been allowed to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I am delighted that the bursting charitable heart of the gentleman in control of the bill has just led him against his better judgment to let us speak a few words this evening. I am not mad. I have been kicked around before. I remember moving backward and forward from one farm to another when I was just a kid.

As I have said before, I do not represent an agricultural district. I represent others than farmers. But I want to say to all you fellow candidates for Congress for 1941 and 1942—and, by the way, this is a very elucidating discussion. We can just tell from the position you take on this issue what platform you are running on back home.

It is all right to be economical. It is a great thing; but if we are going in for this kind of economy we are getting off the main high road.

I remember that we of the Democratic Party announced that we had a great inspiration. We got dramatic. The Democrats came to the people of America and said, "We are going to remember the forgotten man." Those folks took that seriously. We have no fault to pick with the Republican Party. They did not sell this idea to the folks. We sold it to them. They are only dealing in faith, with what they have held to all the time. It is a different story with us. We told the people of the United States that we were going to remember the forgotten man, that we were going to deliver to him who had never been delivered to before; and he believed that, the general run of folks voted with us, so that Negroes who had never dared vote for the Democrats came up and voted in a phalanx, and poor folks, farmers all over the United States, came and voted for the New Deal.

Every State but two marched under the banner of the party of Jefferson to a belief in a brighter and better day for the forgotten man, for the man that needed something done for him. [Applause.] So, since they have done that, if the Democratic Party does let the folks down when they marched up and placed their faith and confidence and heard our call and believed our advice, if we let them down now, we do not deserve to have charge of the activities of the Government at Washington, D. C. [Applause.]

I have a good mind to applaud myself on that remark. It is one of the best I ever made. [Laughter and applause.]

So here we come, and the folks are looking for something. This is mighty poor economy. There are places where you can economize; but anything the Government puts out money for that will pay dividends, even if that time is remote, should not be called a subsidy; it may properly be called a loan, but not a subsidy. The folks that have had what has been called "substance" could get loans, and nobody got excited; but when the man who has helped to build this country, the man who is a part of the maintenance of this Government, comes along, but who has never been a man of substance, because he, who was never figured in before, was to be considered, they get scared and push him away when he tries to get a chance to do something in this life.

The people of Finland are standing up as long as there is a drop of blood in their veins, and are fighting against the overwhelming marching hordes of the Soviet Army today because they have their feet on their own soil, something that is theirs. This is the same thing. I do not care if it takes 40, 50, or 60 years for it to culminate, we have started in the right direction. It has been weighed in the balance and found not wanting. We have seen the bright light of a new day, we have seen the sunburst on a new horizon, we have gone in the right direction and have seen that it is right. Let us now stand firm. This committee has made an arbitrary and unjustified slash in this appropriation, a terrific slash, and every man here who is a Democrat ought to stand right up and help beat down this effort to go back on our promise to the whole people of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK], I represent an industrial district—in fact, mine is one of the largest coal and steel sections in the United States. I realize, however, that if it were not for the farmers the people employed in the industries would have very little work. It is also true that the farmers must depend on the men who work in the industries.

Someone made a statement about me being blind. The remarks was made in a friendly way. I wish to state that all those who can see cannot always believe what they see. [Applause.] No one is so blind as he who has eyes and does not see. [Applause.]

I feel that the legislation we are now considering—the Jones amendment—is progressive and humane.

It is my opinion that we can solve any problem that confronts us if we will be actuated by humanitarian motives. There should not be such a thing as poverty in our country or in any other country in the world. The great God of the universe has put on this earth an abundance of everything that is necessary for the welfare of mankind. Unfortunately most of the world's wealth is possessed by a few people. As long as this condition prevails there will be wars and poverty which are responsible for the human misery that mankind is compelled to endure. There is not any statement in the Old or New Testament or in any other great book written by man—man who is supposed to be inspired by God—where it says that most of the wealth of the world should be owned by the few.

Let us pass legislation which will benefit the farmers, laborers, ex-service men, the aged, and all those who, because of a disability, are unable to provide for themselves.

I have been a Member of this House for about 8 years. I do not remember ever having voted for a legislative measure that would be a detriment to the farmer or the laboring man, and I am proud of that record. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, while I have no farms in my district, representing as I do purely a city district, I am moved to express the reasons why I am going to vote in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

We all come from different parts of this great country of ours—the North, the East, the South, and the West. I come from New England, and we are all products of our environment. We are quite prone to look at our own districts as of the greatest importance and as being paramount in the national welfare. There are times when we cannot resist that influence. I feel its influence on many occasions, despite my efforts to resist it. I am human enough to admit that I feel the influence of sectional environment the same as I feel the influence of other environments that surround me in my journey through life. However, living in Boston as I do, I hope the day will never come when my mind will be beclouded wholly and solely by the influences of the section that I live in, so that I cannot view and appreciate and evaluate the problems of the people of other sections of the United States. [Applause.]

Why am I supporting this amendment? On the one hand we have the argument of the $25,000,000 appropriation. I recognize the power of that argument in these days. On the other hand, we have compelling reasons which prompt me to take the position that I do on this occasion.

I see an evil existing which is a national disgrace. I see that evil as the result of a historical development of a certain part of our country. I see an evil existing which had its origin in the very reasons which prompted the colonization of a certain part of our country, an evil that existed during the colonial days and during the 150 years of constitutional government in our country. I see in a great area of our country human beings, mothers and fathers, just the same as they are in New England, living in other sections of the country and coming within the so-called group of the tenant farmer. I see them with their hopes and their aspirations. I see them with their ambitions. I see the mother and the father, probably, with the greatest ambition that any parent can possess, next to the salvation of their souls, a desire to give their children a little better education than they received in order that their children might better bear the strain of the journey through life.

As I look over the great South, as I look over other sections of our country wherein this is a problem, coming from New England, trying to look at our problems from a national angle, I feel that it is my duty to vote for legislation that will gradually eliminate this evil, the continuance of which will constitute a national disgrace.

What does this legislation do? This legislation strengthens the family life of those affected. Family life is the basis of society and of government. Government could disappear, but the family would continue. Even with government becoming chaotic, the family, the basis of society, would enable mankind, in its chaotic condition, to continue until out of chaos was resurrected again some form of government.

Family life under this legislation is strengthened. This legislation goes one step further. It is an attempt on the part of government, using the functions of our Government, to preserve a private system by extending private ownership in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, through inadvertence I neglected to include the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN]. I ask unanimous consent that he be included in the list for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized for 5 minutes in addition to the 10 minutes remaining?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, may I address myself to my good friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE]? Sam, I wish you were down here in front. I hope you will let me violate the rules to use your first name, because I have a deep and reverent affection for you. I want to ask Sam this, since he is so interested in farm tenancy. Sam has been sponsoring the cost-of-production bill, and he has asked us a number of times to go up and sign the discharge petition. Sam, I know you are interested in cost of production, and so am I, because I think you appreciate and I think you agree that our farm program has not been a success. The reason the cost-of-production petition is on the desk now is because in your judgment and in mine the farmers are not getting cost of production.

Now, are you willing to take this program and put more people on the farm when you have admitted to us, and you have so assiduously crusaded in behalf of cost of production, that we do not have today? Would you not say it was something of a paradox, something of an anomaly, to put more people on the farm under this bill when we do not have cost of production now?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I will answer the gentleman by stating that I am in favor of cost of production, of parity prices for the farmers, and I am in favor of this legislation.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But it does not just stand up in the light of cold logic.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Does that answer your question?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me address myself—

Mr. JONES of Texas. May I say this does not put more people on the farms.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now, let me address myself to the gentleman from Texas. Here is the Farm Act of 1938. It represents a tremendous amount of work and we wanted to go along, and I think you deserve such high credit and commendation for trying to work out a solution. Now, in this act you wrote a provision that we are trying to get parity prices, which goes back to 1909-14. That is the period in which the income of the farmer and the outgo more nearly balanced than at any other time. So it is back in the 1910 period. Now, look at these figures. In 1880, 25 out of every 100 farmers were tenants. In 1898 it went up to 28 out of every 100. In 1900 it went to 35. In 1910, the period we are trying to achieve in this bill that you brought to us and that we passed, it went up to 37. Since this bill is here it has been going up. So that in the last 60 years farm tenancy has gone from 25 out of every 100 to 42 out of every 100 farmers. Mr. Alexander, the Administrator, was asked, on page 948 of the hearings, this question by the chairman:

Can farm tenancy be cured at low prices?

Mr. Alexander, who is expected to administer this Farm Tenancy Act, said, "No."

Gentlemen, what more do you want to oppose the amendment that is on the desk at the present time? I share your desire to do something in this field, but we must first cure farm prices.

Now, one other thing before I conclude.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In just a moment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. You have asked me a question. Will you let me answer it?

Mr. DIRKSEN. In just a moment I will yield.

We have 2,800,000 tenant farmers. The average price paid per farm for 3 years under the tenancy program has been $5,000 a farm. You can solve it mathematically. At the rate we are going it will take 560 years to articulate that program. That is the answer, gentlemen, and I hope you will vote down the amendment now pending on the desk.

I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I would like to make this statement, that the trouble with trying to solve the problem through one bill is that when farm prices go up the land speculators get hold of the land and the purchasers have to pay more. This is the reason tenancy has increased at a greater rate when land prices were high than when they were low. So let us take the farm bill with which 5,800,000 farmers are complying, the highest percentage that ever complied, and yoke up with it a bill that brings up the other wings of the program side by side.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; but the gentleman from Texas has a bill in his committee now asking for $350,000,000 for 3 years to handle mortgages and insured loans.

Mr. JONES of Texas. We had the slum-clearance problem before Congress and passed legislation to take care of it. This is simply parallel legislation to the Federal Housing Act. This just broadens the farm policy.

Mr. DIRKSEN. But here is the Administrator of Farm Credit who said you cannot cure farm tenancy until low prices are overcome.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Fortunately, Mr. Chairman, the committee reporting this bill have thick hides and thick heads. It requires both to bring a bill like this on the floor and escape being lynched by our otherwise good friends whose pet projects are eliminated or curtailed. But one of the many compensations, Mr. Chairman, of membership in this body is association with great-souled men who can differ violently on the floor, and then walk down the corridor arm in arm, the best friends we have in the world. Now, this is especially true of my good friend the gentleman from Texas, MARVIN JONES. He is a man of many parts, a word painter, a golden-throated orator who plays upon the emotions of the House as a master musician plays upon the keys of a mighty organ. And, as usual, he delivered a masterly address on this amendment. But you know we should be frank in the discussion of the vital matters which come up in the course of legislation. And there was one startling omission in that speech. He did not offer any argument in favor of this amendment.

He talked about the importance of home ownership, the beneficent influence of attachment to the land. Of course, we all agree with that. Everybody agrees to those copy-book axioms without a dissenting voice. But that is not the question. The question here is, Will this bill solve the tenant problem and put the tenant farmers of America in possession of their homes and give the American tillers of the soil land of their own? That phase of the question is not mentioned in the gentleman's speech. In all his discussion of the amendment there is no proof that giving one farm to a county a year will eliminate or even appreciably reduce farm tenancy.

Mr. Chairman, what are the facts in the case? This panacea is worthless. It does not accomplish the purpose for which it was designed. The expenditure of the millions of dollars to date has been ineffective, and farm tenancy, instead of being controlled, is increasing at a rapid rate. We have more tenants in America today than we have ever had since Columbus discovered America. Now, that is not a mere estimate. The Department of Agriculture reports that farm tenancy is increasing at the rate of 40,000 a year. And to expect to cope with that flood of homeless and landless farmers by giving farms to a dozen or two in each State has as much hope of success as extinguishing a forest fire with an atomizer.

Mr. Chairman, there is one cure for tenancy, and only one. And that is to raise farm prices to a point where farmers will make enough to buy a farm—and if they already have a farm, make enough to stand off the sheriff. It is a simple but infallible remedy. All that is necessary is for the Committee on Agriculture to bring in a bill giving the farmer a wage for his labor and a price for his produce; nothing else in the world will do it. Prices are the only thing that count and the only factor that affects the farm situation or solves the farm problem. All others are window dressing.

I recall a noted statement made by Speaker Clark, which very well illustrates the principle.

In speaking of emoluments he said, "I have never worked for money in itself. I stay in Congress because I like the service of the House because I feel I can accomplish something worth while. If the salary was reduced to $5,000 I would still stay. If it was reduced to $3,500 I would still desire to be returned. And if it was reduced to nothing, as in the English Parliament, I would still serve until starved out." And that is the position of the farmer. He loves the soil. He feels he is rendering a real service to humanity. He wants to stay on the farm. And he stays when he gets parity for his work. He stays when he gets three-fourths of parity as he does today under the present farm program. He stayed when he got half of parity and he will continue to stay until starved out.

Now you object, Mr. Chairman, that to give the farmer a decent wage and a fair return on his farm would increase the price of land to a point where no tenant could buy. Unfortunately the experience of many years does not bear out that conclusion. When hogs were selling at $24 a hundred there was not a hungry child in America. And when hogs were selling at $2 a hundred bread lines formed in every city in the Nation. That is also true of land. Look up the real-estate transfers in your home county, and you will find that when land sold at $300 an acre more men owned farms than when it sold for $10 an acre.

But they insist this appropriation will, in the end, cost the Government nothing. "It is paying its way." They are paying the money back—that is, most of them." That has a familiar echo. We heard that report with all its embellishments when the Home Owners' Loan Corporation was getting started, and that was what they said when the Federal farm loans were getting under way. You will recall the rosy reports which spilled from their duplicating machines in those early and halcyon days when the new broom was sweeping clean. But today, as a sequel to these activities, the United States Government is the owner, or the potential owner, of more depreciated real estate than any Government has ever possessed since Joseph traded corn for all the lands of Egypt.

And again they plead with us that we must be patient. All they need, they say, is a little time. Why, Mr. Chairman, this Arabian Nights entertainment scheme would not solve the tenant problem in a million years, and that statement is based on the testimony of the Department. The slogan, "A Government loan for every tenant farmer," is akin to the old slogan, "40 acres and a mule," and it is similar to that historical rallying cry in more respects than one. It will not solve the tenant problem. It will not even approach the solution of the tenant problem. Then why does not the Committee on Agriculture bring out a bill that will cure tenancy and at the same time redeem the pledges made by all political parties for the last 20 years?

The tenancy program is an alibi to cover up the fact that the Committee on Agriculture is not considering and has not considered for years, and does not propose to consider, a bill to stabilize farm prices? That may account for the unusual activity of the Committee on Agriculture sponsoring meetings in its committee rooms mornings and evenings in an organized drive to dismember this bill—the best agricultural appropriation bill reported to this House in 10 years. They cannot afford to lose their alibi. It would leave them speechless when asked what they were doing to solve the farm problem.

And while we are discussing alibis, let me pay my respects to another class of gentlemen who are always ready to give three cheers for the farmer but never pay him for the food they mooch off of him at subparity prices. Of all the two-timing, double-dealing apologists who are trying to hood-wink the farmer, the worst and the most transparent is the one who is always ready to tell you how much higher farm prices are today than they were under Hoover. He may claim to be a statesman, but you know him at once for a cheap politician when he begins to cite Hoover prices and fall into ecstasies over the fact that the American farmer today is receiving three-fourths of parity.

If you dropped into a well and that fellow came along, he would pull you up until you were within a quarter of the top of the water and leave you there. And when someone came by and saw you drowning and asked, "Why don't you pull that man out of the well?" they would say: "Yes; but look how far he is up. He is three-fourths of the way up from the Hoover bottom." Why, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Labor has already pulled their man up out of the water and clear out of the well. They have put a floor under him and a ceiling over him. Why has not the Committee on Agriculture done as much for the farmer?

The average income of the farmers of many sections of the country is $500 a year. The Committee on Agriculture says: "We only take $125 of his $500. We leave him $375. The farmer ought to be satisfied with that."

Do you suppose the Committee on Labor would stand by and permit the laboring man to be robbed of one-fourth of his pay every Saturday night as the farmer is? Why, bless your soul, if you attempted to take 25 percent out of the pay of labor, the Committee on Labor would be meeting day and night. If necessary, they would bring out legislation by petition to stop it. That is exactly what they did do. Can you imagine the Committee on Agriculture bringing in a petition to help the farmer?

But the most serious phase of the situation before us today is the fact that we are drifting straight toward the danger which followed the close of the last war. This war in Europe will eventually end. Every man on this floor remembers when the war ended in 1918. You saw wheat drop from $2.40 to 35 cents. You saw cotton drop from 20 cents to 8 cents. You saw corn drop from $1.50 to 10 cents. You saw hogs drop from $18 to $2. What precautions have you taken to avoid that situation at the end of this war? Have you done anything at all?

Are you depending on the present system? Do you not know that since September, hogs have dropped from $10 to $5? You talk about this committee cutting the agricultural appropriation bill in half. Why, the bill has cut hogs in half. When hogs dropped from $10 to $5, did wages drop? Oh, no. Wages today are higher than they were in September. Did the price of farm machinery and fertilizer drop? Oh, no. Since the 1st day of January wheat has fallen 11 cents a bushel and the fertilizer to grow that wheat has gone from $7.50 up to $8.50.

What is the system doing for us? If this system is failing to maintain the farmers' prices, when we have subsidies running into the millions of dollars, when we have a war over on the other side, when we have a drought in a large part of the country, what do you suppose is going to happen when this war closes?

Mr. Chairman, if the Committee on Agriculture does not bring in a bill here and this Congress adjourns and goes home, and the war closes, and farm prices again go to perdition, the farmers of this country will have a pitchfork under the coattails of every member of the Committee on Agriculture who sat idly by and let it happen. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the previous agreement, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] may be extended 4 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield with pleasure to my distinguished Speaker.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from Missouri, as well as all Members of the House, well know what my attitude is upon this question of farm tenancy. I think the gentleman from Missouri will agree to the proposition that in a large sense the Committee on Appropriations, as well as all of the other legislative committees of the House, is the servant of the House in a way. The gentleman agrees to that proposition, does he not?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The fact is that with regard to this proposition, it has been a contested issue before the Congress of the United States in three sessions of Congress. It has been declared the will of the Congress of the United States in both branches and approved by the President of the United States that the Farm Tenant Act shall be adopted as a governmental policy.

Does the gentleman feel that the Committee on Appropriations—and I have the highest respect and regard for the chairman of the subcommittee and all the other members of it—has the moral legislative right to repeal the deliberate will of the Congress of the United States on a great, progressive, social question of this sort by refusing to appropriate one farthing to carry out the will of the Congress of the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am very glad our distinguished Speaker asks that question, because the last time this bill was in the House we voted on increasing the appropriation for farm tenancy and voted it down, and I am glad today to again yield to the expressed will of the House on farm-tenancy appropriation. [Applause.]

I will ask my good friend, the Speaker, what he expects to happen to the price of cotton and corn and hogs when the war ends. What does he suggest in that contingency? Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that when this war ends, the situation will be worse than before, because in 1920 we lent the people of Europe $10,000,000,000.

The prosperity we enjoyed following the war, and the temporary stabilized price of farm products was due to the fact that we were consuming our own money. We lent that money to be spent in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, you can be very certain we are not going to lend them money this time. They will get no money from the United States. As a result, there will be an immediate collapse of prices that will bring such a terrific reaction as we have never seen before, not even in 1932. I plead with the Committee on Agriculture to at least meet and express some willingness to consider a bill. There are half a dozen measures offered—they can take their choice—but they ought at least to meet and consider a bill. We are waiting on them. The farmer is waiting. The country is waiting. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. We will have to have a teller vote anyway, and we may as well have it now.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. JONES of Texas and Mr. CANNON of Missouri.

The Committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 135, noes 149.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, Farm Tenant Act, $3,600,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: On page 81, after line 11, insert a caption and a new paragraph, as follows:

"WATER FACILITIES, ARID AND SEMIARID AREAS

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes,' approved August 28, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 590r-590x), including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, $500,000, of which not to exceed $25,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That not to exceed $50,000 of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure for any one project designed in whole or in part to benefit lands by the irrigation thereof and all project facilities and appurtenances which depend for their utility in whole or in part upon each other or upon any common facility shall be deemed one project, and the authority contained in said act shall not be deemed to authorize the construction of any project not in accord with this limitation."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I first want to thank the House for its extreme patience in listening to the argument on the subject which has just closed. I am persuaded to believe that when the House has had full time to study that question it may change its mind. I know that the Members voted their honest convictions, and that is all I ever ask. I am encouraged by the fact that the subcommittee which went into this thoroughly reported the $25,000,000 which the House did not see fit to adopt. I understand the Appropriations Committee took up this agricultural bill at 10:30 last Tuesday, just before it was taken up in the House, and only had an hour and a half to give to this bill, which had 1,500 pages of hearings. They have a tremendous number of things to see after, and I feel that if they had had an opportunity to go through more thoroughly the various implications of this subject the action might have been different; but I am not discouraged. I am so thoroughly convinced of the merits of the movement that I have every faith that it will live.

This particular subject is a matter that is of great interest to the dry-land areas. It is to conserve the water supply and to enable individual farmers in those areas to install pumping equipment, ponds, and small reservoirs, and to use the water and conserve it where it falls.

The Budget approved the amount which we have asked for in this amendment. The Department, as I understand, asked for some $5,000,000, but the Budget saw fit to only allow $500,000. It is a comparatively new proposition. It is a matter that the whole plains area is very greatly interested in. I cannot think of anything that will do more to further those great areas and the interests of those areas than a proper utilization of the water. In the projects which they have undertaken of individual help they have given the farmers in practically all these instances loans for the purpose of securing the equipment, and it has proven very popular and very successful.

I do not know what the mood of the House will be, but I hope they will see fit to adopt the amendment.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MAHON. I wish to say that I agree with the gentleman. I do not want to take the time of the House, but I know from personal observation that the plan is working successfully, and in view of the fact that the Budget has approved it and the amount is small, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understand, too, may I say in this connection, that the subcommittee which studied this matter reported a provision for the $500,000, but the main committee did not see fit—I am in error on that proposition. My information was not correct and I am sorry. However, the Budget did approve it and it came to the committee.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEFAN. I would like to say to the gentleman from Texas that the amount he has in his amendment is not half enough.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I think that is true.

Mr. STEFAN. I want to support the gentleman's amendment and simply tell the membership of the House that the amount the gentleman is asking in his amendment will barely scratch the surface. The farmers in my district could use all of that amount with a great deal of profit.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I thank the gentleman very much and I wish it was more, but I felt we should not ask for more than the Budget had recommended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yesterday, during the course of my remarks, the gentleman from Illinois made the statement that this item had been transferred to another agency. Is that the fact?

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is not correct. Another agency has the building of the larger irrigation projects, but this particular thing has not been transferred. It is still authorized and it is still in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I am wholeheartedly behind this amendment. I agree with my friend over here who states that it is not enough. I wish we might have the $5,000,000 instead of the $500,000 which the Budget has recommended.

Down in the far Southwest, in the State which I represent, we have a great deal of arid country, country which at one time was occupied by a prehistoric people who farmed the land and built up a high type of civilization, but those people have perished. They have been swallowed up by the desert. Modern men through hydraulic engineering have converted those rich alluvial river plains into the most productive acres in America by means of large-scale irrigation. However, many more homes could be established with water facilities.

Some years ago on a Southern Pacific train I made a railroad trip between Phoenix and Yuma, and on that same trip was a young Hebrew who had just returned from the Holy Land. As we looked out the window on that desert country the young man remarked, "This is much like the land my people are trying to reclaim, the land of Abraham."

Then my mind went back to an account in Genesis, where it speaks of Isaac following in the steps of Abraham. It says the servants of Isaac dug a well which had been dug by Abraham and filled up by the enemy. All this was in a land where to dig a well was greater than to found a city. Further on in this account it says, "There they established altars and dug their wells." I want to have you think of the connection between digging a well and establishing homes and altars.

I listened to the debate on the preceding amendment with much solicitude. I am sorry our great leader in agriculture was unable earlier this evening adequately to express himself, choked as he was, not only by limitation of time but by overwhelming emotions. I felt those same emotions. We are dealing with vital matters here. Generations unborn will be affected by what we do.

I want to say to you that down in my country water, water, water is the essential—more essential than land and as essential as air. That land which formerly had a teeming population of prehistorics could, with engineering projects large and small, be made to support a far greater population of our people than those who now occupy it or those who formerly occupied it.

In this same connection, may I say that when I was home at Christmas I talked with a young Negro, a former student of mine.

He said, "There is a group of our colored folks down there on the desert. We have some good land, rich as the valley of the Nile, but we have no water. If you can manage through some act of the Government to get us water, 25 or 30 families who have been on relief will become self-supporting."

At the same time, about Christmas, three pioneer white men came from northern Arizona, and they said, "Our wells are dried up. If we had $25,000 we could salvage a community. We could reestablish ourselves on land which the Mormon settlers conquered from the wilderness back in 1876." I know of several such places where these industrious, frugal tillers of the earth and lovers of the soil could reestablish themselves through just such aid as this amendment would give them. I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] is recognized.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, the land-utilization program carried on by the Soil Conservation Service operates under title III of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act. Its object as expressed in the language of the act is "to develop a program of land conservation and land utilization, including the retirement of lands which are submarginal or not primarily suitable for cultivation, in order, thereby, to correct maladjustments in land use, and thus assist in controlling soil erosion, protecting the watersheds of navigable streams, and protecting the public lands, health, safety, and welfare." Under this program a total of 48 projects have been established in all parts of the United States. During the past fiscal year 29 new projects were set up. To date, approximately 1,700,000 acres of submarginal land has been purchased at the average cost of $3.88 per acre.

I am sure that the worth and workings of this program can be no better illustrated than a few facts concerning the Cross Timbers land-utilization project in my own district, with which I am familiar. This project was established in Wise County in 1938. It was designed to prevent floods, stop erosion, and rehabilitate thousands of acres of destroyed land in the upper Trinity watershed known as the Cross Timbers, covering parts of Wise, Montague, Parker, Jack, and Tarrant Counties, Tex.

Wise was once one of the most fertile and prosperous counties of Texas. Since 1900 she has lost 41 percent of her population, 59 percent of her farmers. Since 1909 she has lost 57 percent of her cultivated acreage. The value of her crops in 1919 was 286 percent greater than in 1929, her factory wages 232 percent greater. Since 1910 more than 1,200 farms have been abandoned in this county, and cotton production has fallen from a normal yield 25,000 bales to a normal yield of 7,000 bales. Trained and competent men advise that through the soil-conservation and land-utilization program planned and now under way in this area this county can be largely restored to its original fertility with little ultimate expense to the Government. The annual flood loss on three small creeks in this area amounts to $195,000, while flood damage in the Trinity watershed, substantially contributed to by the unimpeded flow from the Cross Timbers belt, amounts to approximately $2,300,000 annually.

The above-mentioned losses are by no means the whole of the evil wrought by unbridled erosion in the above-mentioned Cross Timbers. The cities of Fort Worth and Dallas are not in my district, but I can speak for more than a half million people living in these two metropolitan areas in saying that they are going to be seriously injured by the curtailment of the soil-conservation and land-utilization programs in the Trinity watershed, and especially by the almost total elimination of the Cross Timbers project which will result from the drastic reduction proposed in the land-utilization appropriation of this bill.

Dallas and Fort Worth have many millions of dollars invested in a number of lakes from which they obtain their water supply. Fort Worth officials advise that 70 percent of the silt entering the Trinity River comes from the eroded land in the Cross Timbers area, and that their lakes are being filled by erosion that would be largely stopped with the completion of the Government's soil-conservation and land-utilization program.

What, you ask, have we been spending on this land-utilization program? Upon inquiry I find that the Soil Conservation Service requested of the departmental committee as a minimum to properly carry on this work the sum of $13,491,675. The departmental committee requested of the Bureau of the Budget as a minimum sum to properly carry on this land-utilization work the sum of $10,100,719. The Bureau of the Budget reduced this amount to the sum of $1,102,500, and the amount recommended in this bill by the Appropriations Committee is the sum of $2,100,000.

The direct appropriation for the current fiscal year was the sum $4,978,330. To this amount, however, there was added the sum of $2,445,000, which amount was available because of a reapportionment of an unexpended balance of the 1939 appropriation. This makes a total of $7,423,330 available for the current fiscal year to carry on the land-utilization program. This sum will be fully expended with the expiration of the current year, and the projects now under way will be only partially completed. The amount suggested in this bill is, roughly, 15 percent of the sum thought necessary by the Soil Conservation officials to carry on this work. The bill would appropriate less than 29 percent of the amount of money wisely expended on this great program in the current fiscal year.

In most of these projects scattered farms have been purchased, with options taken on other farms. The acceptance of these options is necessary to the completion of these projects. The acceptance of these options and the completion of these projects is a moral obligation of the Government. It is the duty of this Congress to appropriate at least enough money to keep the skeleton work going. To this end, Mr. Chairman, I suggest an increase in the land-utilization appropriation from $2,100,000 to the sum of $5,000,000, which would still be less than 50 percent of the amount which the Department of Agriculture says is necessary to carry on the program already begun without any expansions or enlargements. This sum is necessary to prevent gross waste and loss in the money already invested in these undertakings.

How does this project operate, you ask? It buys worn-out and destroyed farms, many of which have been abandoned. Such land is retired from cultivation, the gullies and ravines are filled up, erosion is stopped, and the land is subjected to soil-conserving and soil-rebuilding practices that in time will restore its fertility and usefulness. Its value will be increased many fold and eventually the Government will in all probability get its money back, while at the same time vastly contributing to the total national wealth and well-being in this discharge of its duty to its citizens.

To date some 12,000 acres of land have been purchased in the Cross Timbers project. By June 1 it is estimated that 17,000 acres will have been purchased. For the current fiscal year this project has received $65,264. To do a complete job in this area will require the eventual purchase of 175,000 acres of land. At present there is only a crazy quilt of scattered farms purchased by the Cross Timbers project. If the amount of this appropriation is not substantially increased, this work will have to stop. Each session this Congress has been appropriating $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 and similar large amounts to build additional dams on rivers in the Tennessee Valley because, we are told, it is necessary to complete the whole program there and to finish the job, so to speak. Now we ask for only $5,000,000 to continue 48 vital land-utilization projects in all parts of the Union. To sacrifice these projects at this time is like leaving a house half completed. Architects' plans have been accepted. Carpenters have begun their work, the foundation is laid. Some of the material is on the ground. Now, will we sacrifice plans, material, and training in the completion of these authorized projects which we have already begun?

A paint advertiser made famous the slogan "Save the surface and you save all." This might well be the slogan of the Soil Conservation Service, whose work should have been started a hundred years ago.

It is the duty of government to perform for its citizens those useful and necessary services which they cannot perform for themselves. No private individual or association can possibly do this work. It can only be done by the Government. This money is not a loan, a gift, or a subsidy. It is an investment. To conserve and rebuild the soil is not only our right, it is also our duty to ourselves and to our posterity.

In the name of real conservation, of sound economy, and of good judgment, let us increase this appropriation to at least 50 percent of the amount requested by the Department of Agriculture. [Applause.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] is recognized.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I am going to speak to my good friends on the Republican side of the House, because it is to those Members I want to talk. We hear a lot about economy on that side of the aisle, particularly where agriculture is concerned. I do not have to tell you that the future of this country depends upon people owning their own homes. The home is really the foundation of our Government and of our civilization. I want to say that the amount which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has asked for could be used in any one county in the district that I come from, and establish homes for a lot of people who are today on relief that the Federal Government is putting up the money to furnish with jobs.

We have the water. We have the land. The water comes out of the mountains, down through the little streams, trickling down, down the sides of the mountains to the larger streams, and then finds its way to the big rivers, and from there into the Gulf of Mexico, doing flood damages as they go along, and doing no one any good. Those waters may be impounded by the construction of small and inexpensive dams, and when you impound those waters, then you create a place where a man can make a home and raise a family, educate his children, and become a part of civilization.

The great trouble in this country today is that we are not paying sufficient attention to such matters as this. We better look toward establishing homes for the American people. Otherwise, the time may come when there will not be such a thing as private ownership of land.

I hope that this amendment will be agreed to. I know my Republican friends are economy-minded. I know you are sincere about it; but do not take it out of the hides of the farmers and the needy. We are going too far when we do this.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. Would it not be proper for this particular item to go through the committee on which the gentleman from Montana and I serve?

Mr. O'CONNOR. We would like to have it from that committee, but let us not take any chance. Let us vote it in here. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] is recognized.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment directly concerns the States in the Great Plains and mountain regions, but indirectly, at least, it concerns everyone, because the problem it seeks to solve is a national problem. You know the Dust Bowl and the condition that has prevailed in some of the Great Plains States for a number of years. This is a sound, economic attempt to solve that problem by enabling people who live in those areas and who will continue to live there to utilize the water resources which are there. This is not anything in the way of a subsidy. These are loans. Most of them will be repaid, and they will enable those people who have heroically lived through 8 or 9 years of adverse weather conditions to utilize the natural advantages which the country has and to engage in the type of farming which will enable them to hold the soil and to make a living and to cultivate that soil.

I understand, in talking with members of the committee, that there was not any idea on the part of the committee that this was not a proper solution of the problem or that the work was not worth while or that the money was not being well expended, but that they had in mind that possibly it should be handled through the Reclamation Service. In that I disagree. This is not work along the line that the Reclamation Service has been doing. It is being done very well by the Department of Agriculture on individual projects. It is work that has never been handled by the Bureau of Reclamation, and which cannot be done by that Bureau if it follows the policy it has followed in the past.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would like to ask the gentleman, is not the average size of these loans five or six hundred dollars?

Mr. HOPE. That is my understanding. That is true in Kansas, I know. They are individual loans, not of the type carried on by the Reclamation Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] is recognized.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, this program is functioning in 21 States, starting with the Great Plains and including the Rocky Mountains. Last year 580 projects were installed, involving 887 families, and placing under irrigation 18,000 acres. This $500,000 will permit the installation of small irrigation projects that will take care of 1,000 families. These are small well and pond developments that certainly are not within the realm of the Reclamation Bureau, which constructs only large structures after thorough and careful investigation. It takes care of only the family unit.

If you want to take care of the economic life of the thousands of families in the entire West you can do it with this small $500,000 appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the time allotted to the Committee will be consumed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will not be adopted for some very good and persuasive reasons.

This function was authorized by law in 1937 and it was expected that it would get along with a modest amount. Now, let us see exactly what happened. In addition to the regular appropriation for this function, they received $1,100,000 in relief funds in 1939, and they received over $3,000,000 in relief funds in 1940. So a new function is like a snowball moving downhill—as it gathers momentum, it gets larger.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I cannot yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I question the gentleman's statement there. They were not relief funds.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Emergency funds, let us call them.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is quite different. If it had been intended to take it out of relief funds as a relief measure, it would have been in the relief bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is substantially the same thing so far as appropriations are concerned. They were emergency funds. They got an extra million in 1939 and an extra $5,000,000 in 1940.

Mr. FERGUSON. The total amount in 1939 was only $1,000,000.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It has been the opinion of the committee that if this function is to be continued it should be consolidated with the Reclamation Service. They say to us it handles only larger projects. There is not anything to prevent them from handling this type of project, and since they are out in the Great Plains and Rock Mountain area, where the Reclamation Bureau is functioning, where it is equipped with engineers and trained personnel—and the same applies to the Southwest and the work in the field of irrigation and water facilities, an organization which is best performing this function with efficiency—if we would let this item go over into the Reclamation Service that represents the best judgment of the committee after taking testimony on it.

It represents their best judgment in feeling that it can be properly coordinated in the Department of the Interior; and since it subserves the interest of efficiency of government it should be transferred to an agency already equipped with engineers. I deem it, therefore, in the best interest of all concerned to let this go over. I hope, therefore, that the Committee will not adopt the pending amendment.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Is it not true that the only authority under law by which this work can be done lodges the administration in the Department of Agriculture? And if you put it under the Bureau of Reclamation will it not take additional substantive legislation?

Mr. DIRKSEN. There will be very little difficulty in getting it into the Reclamation Service. I believe it will not be worth bothering about.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. Is not this particular item better placed under Reclamation than it is in the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; that is the feeling of the committee.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further there?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. HOPE. Does not this fall in line with efforts to control water loss by the building of ponds and such things that do not come under the Reclamation Service?

Mr. DIRKSEN. This is but one phase of the whole subject of geology with which the Reclamation Service is dealing today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired; all time on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. THOMAS F. FORD and Mr. STEFAN) there were—ayes 87, noes 121.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act, approved May 18, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 568b) (not to exceed $300,000), and the provisions of sections 4 (not to exceed $100,000) and 5 (not to exceed $77,898) of the act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor," approved June 7, 1924 (16 U. S. C. 567-568), and acts supplementary thereto, including the employment of persons and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; not to exceed $7,700 for the purchase of passenger-carrying vehicles; the purchase of reference books and technical journals; not to exceed $30,000 for the construction or purchase of necessary buildings, and other improvements; in all, not to exceed $400,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in any State or Territory unless the State or Territory, or local subdivision thereof, or individuals, or associations contribute a sum equal to that to be allotted by the Government or make contributions other than money deemed by the Secretary of Agriculture to be the value equivalent thereof: Provided further, That in carrying into effect the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act, no part of this appropriation shall be used to establish new nurseries or to acquire land for the establishment of such new nurseries.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I need apologize for taking these 5 minutes as it is the first time I have spoken on this appropriation bill. I feel that a man who comes directly from the farm to the House of Representatives has at least the right to the floor for that length of time when considering the agricultural appropriation bill. So I am requesting this of you and ask you to listen to me as I have listened courteously to each and every Member who has spoken for the last 4 days. I want to bring out only one thing in these few minutes—a matter of great consequence to the millions of farmers who today receive less than cost of production for their commodities.

In the 4-day discussion of this bill I feel we have not paid any attention whatsoever to what in my opinion is the most important part of the bill, and that is the appropriation for parity, which is conspicuous by its absence.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. If I can secure time when I have finished my remarks I shall be pleased to yield. I regret, Mr. Chairman, I must be forced to decline to yield to the very good friend of the farmer the gentleman from Oklahoma.

It seems strange to me, Mr. Chairman, as I stand here giving the attitude of a farmer who for years himself worried as to whether or not he could get enough out of what he was trying to produce from the farm to break even—it seems to me very strange, I repeat, to realize that the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, has not demanded that the $200,000,000 for parity payments be included in this measure. Surely, the Secretary knows that the failure of such an appropriation means taking out of the pockets of 4,000,000 farmers the sum of $50 each on an average.

Fifty dollars may not seem like much to you Members here today. To me it means, however, that every farmer in my district, the Seventh of Minnesota, can use this much needed, justly needed payment to pay his personal-property tax which comes due this month. The farmer eventually pays the bulk of the taxes in our country, either direct or indirect.

Surely this Congress remembers that it promised the farmers of America parity payments to bring up to three-quarters of parity the price of corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, and rice. Shall we redeem that promise or will this great body turn its back on our farmers and say to them, "No; we can spend $2,000,000,000 for national defense this year, but 10 percent of that money is too much to give to you for producing food for the Nation at a loss?"

It also seems to me very strange, Mr. Chairman, that the President of the United States in the first place has refused to even put into the Budget this all-important $200,000,000 for parity, for justice to agriculture. In other words, I consider that when that Budget was written, then the cut was made—hundreds of millions were slashed right there—and as if that were not sufficient, the Appropriations Committee comes in and further knocks down the appropriation for the one basic industry of America. I know economy is necessary, but it does appear unjust that each year when the agricultural appropriation bill comes before the House for consideration a great cry for economy rises from the Chamber.

The newspapers of the cities harp about the great expenditures for the farmer, forgetting that 31 percent of the people in America live on farms and certainly should receive from the Government as much consideration as any other department. There is not a farmer in Minnesota who is not willing to take whatever cut is necessary to balance the Budget. The average farmer is fair. The farmers of America do not object to taking their just proportion of such a reduction in order to give our National Treasury an opportunity to break even. No farmer wants a continuation of this huge piling up of our national debt. But here you are asking us to take at least a 30-percent cut or more and the huge appropriation bills for the Independent Offices, the Treasury, and Post Office Departments slide through this House with less than a 10-percent deduction, and no cry at all from the city dailies for economy. I do not call that justice and that is what I am personally objecting to, my fellow Members. I am perfectly willing to take a cut of 30 or 40 percent for agriculture if you will do the same thing all the way down the line in the other appropriation bills. Every farmer would agree to this. [Applause.]

It is not a subsidy that agriculture is asking in these parity payments. It is simply justice. I feel that we are entitled to them, and consequently I have upon the Clerk's desk right now a motion to recommit this bill. In that motion to recommit, I demand of the House that this appropriation bill be sent back to committee with instructions to insert in the bill two hundred millions for parity payments.

Seeing the rather surprising attitude of the Members here today that parity should be forgotten for the present and to depend on the Senate to include that provision. Noticing this short-sighted trend, I have cast about for a method of forcing a roll call today on this issue.

I know now that my motion to recommit will not be given consideration by the House as the parliamentary situation gives the Appropriations Committee priority in offering such a motion, and only one such motion is permissible.

This motion to recommit and include parity in the bill will never reach the floor; I realize that, and consequently I am addressing these few remarks to you. However, I want to tell you that, inasmuch as the New Deal has seen fit to give away the American market to foreigners, if you please, through so-called trade agreements, that we, the farmers, are not asking for anything but justice when we request parity payments. [Applause.]

I feel that if we could get down to business in this House and in the Congress and put a 3-percent interest rate on all farm mortgages we would be doing something for the farmers. I feel if we would take off of their necks these feed and seed loans that have been clamped there for years, way back from the time of dire distress in the drought year of 1934, we should accomplish much good.

If there is anything detestible, in my opinion, it is to see our Government—yours and mine—making life miserable for thousands of farmers who are trying to do their best to stay off of W. P. A. Why in God's name should one department of our Government try to rehabilitate farmers through farm-tenancy loans and another department make thousands of new tenants and renters each year by applying the technique of a Shylock in their collection methods? Surely our paid servants could remember that a little leniency here and there would be preferable to squeezing this poor farmer and that poor renter for feed loans that should have been considered relief long ago. I intend to request of this House at an early date at least partial cancelation of these old feed and seed loans. In conclusion, fellow Members, since the farmer of America is feeding this country and not even receiving day wages for it, I do not think we are asking for anything but justice for the farmers of America in demanding this parity appropriation. Surely this House should be big enough to take up the issue right today instead of waiting to see what the Senate is going to do as far as parity is concerned. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For administrative expenses and expenses of studies, investigations, publications, and reports, including the salary of the Administrator, Rural Electrification Administration, and other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; rentals, including buildings and parts of buildings and garages, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase and exchange of books, law books, books of reference, directories, and periodicals; not to exceed $200 for newspapers and press clippings; financial and credit reports; and all other expenses necessary to administer said act, $3,075,000, of which amount not to exceed $1,350 shall be available for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles necessary in the conduct of work in the District of Columbia and elsewhere: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay the salary of any person who received as many as three steps of administrative within-grade promotion in all positions occupied by such person during the fiscal year 1939, at a rate of pay in excess of the salary resulting from the first two steps of such promotion; but this proviso shall not preclude the payment of the minimum salary of the grade to any person transferred, under standard regulations, to such grade: Provided further, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) shall not be construed to apply to any purchase or service rendered for the Rural Electrification Administration when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $100: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make allotments from this appropriation, subject to the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to the offices and divisions of the Office of the Secretary for the performance of departmental services for the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLLINS: Strike out on page 83 the proviso beginning in line 10 and ending at the end of line 17.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this is another of the several amendments proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and adopted by the full Committee on Appropriations. This amendment does two things. It denies salaries during the fiscal year 1941 to all persons in the Rural Electrification Agency who have had more than three promotions during or since 1939 and, second, it eliminates $25,000 from the appropriation in order to take care of these reductions in salaries. It is an effort to strike indirectly at rural electrification by denying salary increases to the worthy employees of that organization that has done so much to promote the electrification of the farms of this country.

The direct effect of the amendment is to take away an average of $125 each from 96 unclassified employees of the R. E. A. and 112 classified employees. I would be in favor of the amendment if the salaries of Rural Electrification employees were larger on the average than the salaries of other comparable organizations in the Government. There are five other comparable lending organizations—the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Farm Credit Administration, Farm Security Administration, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and Federal Power Commission—all employing high-type attorneys, engineers, and experts, as does R. E. A. Looking at the salary averages of these five agencies as submitted in the President's Budget, we find that the Rural Electrification Administration employees receive an average wage of $2,342, the employees of the Federal Power Commission an average of $2,655, Securities and Exchange Commission, $2,635; Farm Security Administration, $2,710; Farm Credit Administration, $2,585, and Reconstruction Finance Corporation, $2,693.

The Rural Electrification employees, even with the increases which the gentleman from Illinois is trying to take away from them are receiving an average of more than $300 per year less in salaries than the employees of the other five comparable organizations doing the same types of work.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this organization has lent about $315,000,000, and the total administrative expenses are less than 1 percent.

I submit this is a record of achievement that we should be proud of, and I know they are. We ought not to do something to strike at the fine work they are doing. And certainly the destruction of these people's morale is just the beginning of an effort to strike directly at R. E. A.

The first appropriations of consequence for rural electrification were provided for the fiscal year 1937 and amounted to $50,000,000. In 1938 $30,000,000 was appropriated; in 1939 $140,000,000; and in 1940 $40,000,000. The present bill for 1941 carries $40,000,000. It will be noted that appropriations for the fiscal year 1939 for rural electrification provided an increase of approximately 360 percent over the amount available for 1938. At the same time the increase in the appropriation for administrative expenses to take care of this increased program was only approximately 50 percent. In order to administer effectively a 360 percent increase in the loan program with 50 percent increase in administrative expenses, a heavily increased responsibility was imposed upon most persons in the organization and particularly upon those in the technical and nonclassified positions. As a matter of sound administrative policy this increased responsibility was imposed as far as possible upon persons already employed who were familiar with the work, rather than upon new personnel. The relatively small sum expended in salary increases of more than two steps could have been utilized in the employment of additional persons but it seemed a better policy to impose the increased responsibilities upon the existing staff with a resulting financial recognition.

I submit that the efforts of the gentleman from Illinois and his Republican colleagues are imposing an unusual hardship upon the 198 persons whose salaries they are seeking to reduce by an average of $125 per year. Especially is this true when it is apparent that the average salaries of these employees are approximately $300 per year less than the average salaries of other Federal agencies employing the same types of personnel.

I submit therefore that the amendment should be defeated.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, if, as my ingenious and solicitous friend from Mississippi indicates, I were anxious to cripple rural electrification, I would move to reduce the $40,000,000 in loans or make a point of order against the way they are getting their money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in this bill; but that was not my desire in offering this amendment relative to promotions, which was adopted in the committee by a vote of 25 to 9. I approve of the R. E. A., but I want to see it proceed in a proper and orderly fashion.

If the gentleman from Mississippi wanted to make a comparison, why not compare the Rural Electrification Administration with the other agencies in the Department of Agriculture? Out of the 13 agencies, its salary sufficiency is the highest. For another comparison, it is the third in 32 agencies of the Government, and it is the youngest agency.

The reason for the amendment, however, is this: They have flagrantly abused the privilege of promotion—73 percent of the R. E. A. employees received promotions. How many in the Department of Agriculture over all? Only 25 percent. Sixty-one percent received two-step promotions; in the whole Department, only 10 percent. Thirty-five percent received three-step promotions; in the whole Department, only 1.7 percent.

I would not have kicked about that, but sometimes you develop a long memory. Last year I served downstairs in the independent offices hearings when rural electrification was in that bill. Mr. Craig came before us. He was the Assistant Administrator at that time. I remember that he did not have any money for administrative promotions. When they came upstairs before the Department of Agriculture subcommittee this year I said to Mr. Craig, and it is so recorded on page 1133:

There was no provision made in 1939 and no provision made in 1940 for administrative promotions?

Mr. Craig said:

That is right.

If as stated, no funds for promotions were available in 1939 and 1940, does not the very fact of promotions constitute a breach of faith?

Where did they get the money? Where did they get the money for five-step promotions, for six-step promotions, for scores of four-step and three-step promotions? It is a scandal and a shame. That is the reason that amendment is in there. You have to discipline some of these governmental departments, and this is a good place to start. [Applause.]

They have been calling me on the telephone anonymously, offering to come up and give me the dirt as to what is going on. They do not have to give it to me. I made them insert in the record the names of everybody who got a six-step promotion. I made them admit that when the President fabricated the reorganization plan which was effective about the 9th of May they piled on promotion after promotion from the 9th of May to the 1st of July, to beat the salary freeze and to violate the law. Do not be misled by the red herring drawn across the trail by my friend from Mississippi. There are 947,000 people on the pay roll, and if we do not start disciplining them, if we do not start assuming congressional control over salaries and flagrant abuses, they are going to eat up and destroy this Government. So I ask you to vote down the amendment that is on the desk at the present time.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Has not the same thing occurred under Social Security, that illegal promotions have been made?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It has gotten pretty rank in Government, and this is the first step. I have spent days and days gathering this material. I have had a great time. It has taken all sorts of calls to get the information I wanted.

I have here a letter from the Assistant Administrator in which he said that he verifies the data I am giving to you and that was in the record. You cannot laugh that off, so vote the amendment down. [Applause.]

To document this whole matter fully, so that there can be no question about it, let me submit the following data:

The following table is consolidated from the data which appears in the hearings and shows number of promotions, number of steps of promotion, ratings of those promoted, and the total number of employees in Rural Electrification Administration.

This table shows both civil-service and non-civil-service personnel and consolidates the promotions for the fiscal year 1939.

PROMOTIONS PENDING RECLASSIFICATION

There were 43 promotions "pending anticipated reclassification" reported by R. E. A. among the class receiving 3 or more steps of promotion.

This means that as soon as a position is submitted to the Civil Service Commission with a request for reclassification, which, of course, may or may not be approved by the Civil Service Commission, the R. E. A. gives the action immediate effect with respect to increase of compensation by a promotion of one or more steps within the grade. Then, if the Civil Service Commission denies the reallocation, the employee already has the increase of pay as a result of the within-grade promotion, which, after all, is the primary objective.

In the absence of any statement to the contrary on the part of R. E. A., it is to be presumed that where a request for reallocation is denied by the Civil Service Commission, the R. E. A. did not vacate its promotion action in such case, although the anticipated reallocation was the only ground assigned for such promotion.

This type of promotion certainly was not contemplated by Congress when it passed the Classification Act. Promotions were to be based upon the employee's efficiency rating and were to have no relation whatever to any action to reallocate the position to a higher grade.

The following tabulation shows promotions in Rural Electrification Administration as compared with other bureaus in the Department of Agriculture and is derived from data furnished by the Director of Personnel for the Department of Agriculture. These figures cover the fiscal year 1939:

PROMOTIONS IN R. E. A. TO BEAT THE "PAY FREEZE"

The Reorganization Act contains a provision the effect of which is to prevent any administrative promotions or change in classification of personnel during the present fiscal year in agencies transferred under either of the two reorganization plans.

On May 9, 1939, reorganization plan No. II, under which R. E. A. was transferred to the Department of Agriculture, was sent to Congress. From that date the R. E. A. had knowledge that, beginning July 1, no administrative promotions could be put into effect for an entire year. It is interesting to note what the R. E. A. did in the premises.

The following statement shows promotions for the year before May 9, a period of more than 10 months, and those from May 9 to the end of the year, a period of less than 2 months:

	Promotions made—
	Before May 9	May 9 and after
Civil-service personnel.....	298	179
Non-civil-service personnel.....	100	123
Total.....	398	302

The above speaks for itself.

Presumably conscience-stricken by its own record, the R. E. A. supplied a statement, which had not been requested, in justification of the promotions made after the submission of the reorganization plan, revealed that they were approaching a year of famine with respect to promotions. Being already gorged from 398 promotion actions earlier in the year, many of them of 3-, 4-, and 5-step measure, R. E. A. instituted, from May 9 to the 1st of July following, an additional 302 promotion actions, of which there were 44 two-step promotions, 45 three-step promotions, 5 four-step promotions, and 4 six-step promotions.

The following justification for these wholesale promotions in the face of the impending pay freeze was gratuitously supplied by the R. E. A.:

These promotions were made in accordance with administrative decisions fairly early in the fiscal year to make such promotions as soon as budgetary savings would be revealed toward the close of the year. They were made during the month of May in accordance with such policy adopted earlier because budgetary savings were not revealed until that month.

Apparently promotions in R. E. A. are not confined to those financed from ordinary lapses in salary funds, which occur with a degree of regularity throughout the year, but include large numbers which are financed from budgetary savings of a different character.

Now, the Appropriations Committee has been told by Budget Bureau and departmental representatives that promotions were being financed from savings in the funds set up for personal services by reason of lapses therein of the following character, known as turn-over lapses:

First. Lapse of time between the vacating of a position and the filling of the vacancy.

Second. Savings resulting from filling vacancy at the entrance salary where the outgoing employee had been receiving a salary one or more steps above the entrance salary.

Third. Savings resulting from reorganization of the personnel set-up of a bureau or unit, there being no change in the function, as a result of which some positions are abolished, with a net reduction in obligation for salaries.

There is a more or less even flow throughout the year of events of the kind above noted from which increases in pay can be granted to various individuals without any increased cost to the appropriation.

Lapses which are not legitimate to use for promotions are:

First. Those due to part-year employment where the appropriation provides money for additional personnel and the bureau is not able to fill the positions until sometime after the beginning of the fiscal year.

Second. Lapses accruing on account of leave without pay.

It is patent that R. E. A. could not have financed its 1939 program of promotions from turn-over lapses alone. Indeed, the Bureau of the Budget estimates that lapses of every kind will not ordinarily exceed 3 percent of the annual salary base; and applying this maximum percentage to the 1939 salary base of $1,578,149, as shown in the current Budget for R. E. A., we have somewhat less than $50,000, whereas R. E. A. promotions during 1939 amounted to approximately $100,000.

It is evident that the R. E. A. 1939 promotion program, in addition to being far out of line with promotions in general throughout the Government service, were financed by means which, if within the law, are not within sound policy nor within the tenets of good faith with Congress.

The following table indicates that of 32 governmental agencies R. E. A. rates third in sufficiency of available appropriations to bring below-average salaries to the average of grades as of June 30, 1939:

The following table indicates that out of 13 bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, R. E. A. stands first in percentage of sufficiency of available appropriations to bring below-average salaries to the average of the grade as of June 30, 1939. These computations were made from data supplied to the Committee on Appropriations by the Bureau of the Budget:

The following language is quoted from page 1133 of the hearings on the Agriculture Department appropriation bill for 1941:

Mr. DIRKSEN. If I remember, Mr. Craig, when you were before the subcommittee downstairs last year there were no administrative promotions for 1940.

Mr. CRAIG. 1939.

Mr. DIRKSEN. There was no provision made in 1939 and no provision made in 1940.

Mr. CRAIG. That is right.

The following table is in the nature of a report on the changes in status of non-civil-service employees—not subject to the Classification Act—in the departmental service:

FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1939

[NOTE.—Promotions shown were given because the duties and responsibilities were deemed to have so increased in importance that reallocations would have been proposed, rather than administrative promotions, had the positions been subject to the Classification Act. The promotions shown represent the equivalent in salary increase which would have resulted from such reallocation.]

The following tables, taken from the hearings, show the names of those nonclassified in R. E. CORRECTION OF ERROR IN R. E. A. TABLES

I have been assured by R. E. A. that none of their employees had an efficiency rating below "good" and that in the table on page 1508 of the hearings the report of 47 of its non-civil-service employees in the "below good" column is incorrect. The figure should appear in the adjoining column headed "Not subject." The error occurred in the R. E. A. personnel office and was not discovered until after the hearings were printed. I am glad to comply with Mr. Craig's request that the correction be indicated in my remarks.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], the author of this provision which we are trying to strike out, never loses an opportunity to try to injure rural electrification. If he had wanted to be fair with the House, why did he not give you the whole story? As a matter of fact, 2 years ago when I secured an extra $100,000,000 for rural electrification, raising the amount to $140,000,000 instead of $40,000,000, and really started the present program to electrify the farm homes of America, the Rural Electrification Administration had to have help. In order to get it, instead of going out and bringing in new men, inexperienced men, they promoted the men they had and brought other men from the outside to fill their former places. These men who were thus promoted are lawyers, engineers, or other scientific men, who have done the greatest job of any organization that has ever been created by this Government for the length of time it has been operating—with the possible exception of the T. V. A.

Why did not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] read you the law, which states:

And he—

may without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws applicable to officers and employees of the United States, appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys, engineers, and experts, and he may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such other officers and employees as he may find necessary, and prescribe their duties.

That is exactly what the Administrator did. When he found himself with this great burden of work, when he found this money in his hands and an opportunity to go forward to electrifying America, electrifying the farm homes of the country, with the farmers in every State appealing for this service, he simply promoted these men as the law provides and then went out and got others to fill their former places. As a result, we have electrified more farm homes in this country in the last 4 years than had been electrified in the 60 years previous to that time.

Four years ago we had only about 700,000 electrified farms; now we have more than 1,700,000. In every State of the Union, in every congressional district that is interested, this work is going on. These men are not drawing a dollar of salary more than the same class of men in other branches of the Government service are drawing. But this gave the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] an opportunity to take a punch at the Rural Electrification Administration, the one organization that has done more for the farmers of America—more for the farmers of his own district—than any other organization connected with this Government has ever done. In fact, it has done more for them in 4 years than had been done for them in 60 years previous to the creation of the R. E. A. and the T. V. A.

In addition to that, we have forced rate reductions to the electric light and power consumers of this country amount—ing to $583,000,000 a year, which is more than we have spent all told on either the R. E. A. or the T. V. A. up to this time and more than even the enemies of the T. V. A. contend it will ever cost. We have reduced rates to the people of Illinois alone more than $50,000,000 a year. They enjoy this saving every year, and if we can ever get rates down to their proper levels, to the T. V. A. rates even, they will enjoy a further reduction of $69,000,000 a year in the State of Illinois.

Rural electrification is the greatest blessing that ever came to the farmers of America and I regret the efforts of some of the old-guard Republicans to cripple it at every turn.

A TALE OF TWO FARMERS

Let me relate to the House a tale of two farmers. While this story all concerns one man, life for him and his family was so different 5 years ago from what it is today, and his surroundings were so different from what they are now, that he is almost, if not quite, a different man.

This farmer is named C. W. Duncan. He lives on rural route No. 2, out from Tupelo, Miss., my home town. Five years ago he had no electricity, his house was dark, his barn was dark, they drew the water for family use and to water the stock in dry weather from a deep well. He went to town to buy what little ice his family enjoyed, and invariably lost the milk which he was selling to the condensery, because of the lack of fresh water with which to cool it.

He raised the feed for his stock but invariably had to haul it to town to get it ground and then haul it back. Often it was impossible for him to get his corn and other products crushed, and he had to feed it whole, which occasioned great loss. Besides, he had to pay a toll to get it ground, which invariably ran as high as one-fourth. Then he had to mix his feed by hand, which also took time that he could have applied to something else.

The women in the family did their own washing and ironing. They would build a fire under a large pot and stand over it even in the hot summertime, punching the clothes down with a stick and absorbing the heat from the blazing fire. Then they would take them out, put them in a tub of hot water, bow down over a scrubboard, and rub them until they were tired enough to drop.

They were doing just what millions of farm women are doing today, where we have been unable to reach them with rural electrification.

When time for ironing came they would build a blazing fire and heat the old family iron almost red hot and then lean over it and iron those clothes until they absorbed practically all the heat the old iron contained.

But relief from such drudgery came to this home in the form of a rural power line, bringing to them T. V. A. power at T. V. A. rates. Today Mr. Duncan has a small hammer mill with a two-horsepower motor with which he grinds corn-meal, soybean hay, ear corn with or without the shucks on it, chops, grits, cottonseed, and anything and everything else that is necessary for feed. This mill has five screens, 1 inch for chopped feed, one-half inch for ear corn, one-quarter inch for hay and oats, one-sixteenth inch for grits, and one thirty-second inch for meal. With these four screens he can cut and grind his feed in any way that he desires and then mix it to the proper texture for the most economical and effective consumption.

In 1 hour he can grind a barrel of soybean hay or a barrel of ear corn. It is so easy to operate that even the children can manage it.

In addition to this mill, he has electric lights in his house and in his barn. He has an automatic electric water system that carries water throughout the house. He has a bath, a radio, an electric iron, a washing machine, and an electric refrigerator, as well as an electric chicken brooder.

His refrigerator makes all the ice the family needs and provides a cold-storage compartment for the preservation of meats, eggs, milk, butter, fruits, and vegetables. His water system not only supplies water for the house, including the bath, but it also furnishes all the water his stock can drink at all times. His radio brings him the news from all over the world and gives his family the best entertainments that go over the air.

Instead of putting in a day a week scrubbing the family clothes, the wife can now place them in the electric washer, turn the switch, and go on about her work. In 2 hours they are washed, run through the wringer, and are hanging on the line.

With her electric iron, the ironing of the family clothes has become less burdensome, to say the least of it, compared with ironing under the old system. Compared with what it was 4 years ago, farming has become a pleasure with him; and compared with the drudgery his wife formerly experienced under the old system, housekeeping has become a luxury.

Last month they used 180 kilowatt-hours of electricity, which cost them $5.10, including $1 that went to amortize the line. As soon as these lines are paid out this charge will be taken off.

While he is the same man and his wife the same woman, they are living in a new world.

They now have every convenience to be found in the average city, without the noise and extra taxes; and his electric rates are lower than they are in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, or Chicago.

This is what we are trying to bring to every farm home in America.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment offered by my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] should be adopted and this Dirksen provision that would tend to paralyze or embarrass the Rural Electrification Administration should be stricken from the bill.

Instead of harassing the R. E. A. with tactics of this kind, the gentleman from Illinois should join us in our efforts to electrify every farm home in America, including the great State of Illinois, at rates the farmers can afford to pay. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RANKIN) there were—ayes 75, noes 107.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Loans: For loans in accordance with sections 3, 4, and 5, and the purchase of property in accordance with section 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901-914), $40,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 3 (a) of said act, and shall be considered as made available thereunder; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized under said section 3 (a) and without regard to the limitation in respect of time contained in section 3 (e) of said act.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language beginning on page 84, line 7, with the word "which", and ending with the word "act", in line 15, that it is legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri concedes the point of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have just heard a little history recited by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. It is a rather exciting story, judging by the energy with which it was told. [Laughter.]

As we approach the end of our consideration of this bill I am wondering if you will indulge me for about 2 minutes in the recital of a little incident which occurred in my youth, and which may throw a little light upon the history of appropriations for the support of the Department of Agriculture.

I do this with some shyness, yet perhaps it may be interesting to some of you, although not really important. My father was a Member of the House of Representatives for 20 years. For 10 years he was chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. In his day the standing committees of the House handled the appropriation bills upon the floor. That was before the days of the Budget. May I say that he had been a farmer all his life and was intensely interested in the success of agriculture.

Back in 1904, in my youth—believe it or not, but do not let it go any further—I came to Washington to visit the old gentleman, and he said to me, "My boy, I am having a terrible time in the handling of the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill. The habit of extravagance is about to overcome us. I do not know what I can do about it. I am struggling and fighting against extravagance. My boy, I don't believe I can keep the bill under $15,000,000." [Laughter and applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 8202, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the so-called sugar amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The Committee does not desire a separate vote on any amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the remaining amendments other than the one upon which the gentleman from Florida demands a separate vote.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON of Missouri: On page 79, after line 9, insert a caption and a new paragraph, as follows:

"THE SUGAR ACT OF 1937

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions, other than those specifically relating to the Philippine Islands, of the Sugar Act of 1937, approved September 1, 1937 (7 U. S. C. 1100-1183), and the employment of persons and means, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as authorized by said act, $47,500,000: Provided, That conditional payments in connection with the 1940 sugar program shall not be made if, by proclamation under section 509 of said act, title II or title III shall have been suspended and shall remain suspended until July 1, 1940."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Taber moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to report the same back forthwith with the following amendment: Page 81, line 8, strike out "$2,100,000" and insert "$1,100,000."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

By unanimous consent the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk of the House may be authorized to correct all totals.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who have spoken on the bill may have five legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made this afternoon, and to include therein on the matter of the pink bollworm, a statement made by Mr. R. E. McDonald, of the Bureau of Entomology.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution from the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a letter addressed by myself to the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Also, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a very able address given in Chicago this week before the American Road Builders' Association on the Civil Aeronautics Act.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a eulogy on the late Julian N. Frient.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to permit Members to make unanimous-consent requests?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain excerpts and tables.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein a letter from the Associated General Contractors of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein certain tables made up by myself.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING UN-AMERICAN AND SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making an announcement on behalf of the Special Committee Investigating Un-American and Subversive Activities.

A session of this committee was held today. Three Members of the House, able and distinguished colleagues of ours, appeared before the committee by invitation of the committee and made statements on behalf of those three Members. At the request of the special committee I make the following statement:

It has been alleged, falsely so, the committee finds, that these gentlemen attended a dinner or a meeting at which a supposed plot to kill the special committee was discussed and some sort of concerted action agreed upon. That statement, according to testimony received by our committee, or those allegations, are wholly untrue and inaccurate. We found that our colleagues the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LARRABEE], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE], the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] were invited to a dinner at the home of one Gardner Jackson.

The gentlemen who testified today stated in effect that neither of them were apprised of the guest list or that any matter of legislation was to be discussed. They did state that during the course of the evening matters relating to the work of this special committee were brought up by their host and the question of certain documents, which have since been inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] were discussed.

Mr. KEEFE. Which gentlemen?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. These gentlemen appeared before the committee today, Messrs. RAMSPECK, LARRABEE, and COFFEE of Washington. Neither of those gentlemen, as I recall, testified that he saw any of the documents, but in the discussion concerning them they advised against their use because of the doubtful authenticity of the documents, in the first place, and, in the second place, because there was absolutely no connection between the chairman of the special committee, Mr. DRES, and the purported letters which were later found to be forgeries. One of the Members did state that he suggested they were not only of doubtful authenticity, but granting their authenticity, they were not legal and it would be unethical to use them.

The committee finds there was absolutely no concerted action, collusion, understanding, or agreement by either of the three who testified before us today, or their colleague the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], with reference to any concert of action against the Dies committee or the use of any of these documents which have since been placed in the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to make this statement in behalf of these Members and to say that no such testimony has been received from any source, including Mr. Weisberg and Mr. Jackson, who told of this meeting, which would in any way involve either of the colleagues I have mentioned—namely, Messrs. RAMSPECK, LARRABEE, COFFEE of Washington, or MURDOCK of Utah, or any conduct that could be considered unethical at any time anywhere; but, to the contrary, the same high type of conduct and gentlemanly action existed which these gentlemen have exhibited on and off the floor of the House during their meritorious career as Members of the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask this: Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES] intend, or so far as he knows, does any member of the committee intend to present this matter of the forging of the letters, or perhaps more accurately the alleged forging of the letters, to the grand jury?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. The case is not entirely closed. It will probably be closed during the week. After that the committee will have to determine what action is to be taken.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SATTERFIELD (at the request of Mr. BLAND), indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. LANHAM (at the request of Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON), for 1 day, on account of illness.

To Mr. BUCK, for 1 day, on account of official business.

To Mr. GILLIE, for 1 day, on account of illness.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. I want to know if in the future it will be necessary for a Member of Congress who is invited out to dinner to obtain the consent of the Committee on Un-American Activities?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that is a parliamentary inquiry.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

Bills, a joint resolution, and a concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 2346. An act for the relief of Beryl M. McHam; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1940

The House was called to order at 12 o'clock noon by Hon. South Trimble, Clerk of the House.

The Clerk read the following communication from the Speaker:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 5, 1940.

I hereby designate Hon. SAM RAYBURN to act as Speaker pro tempore for 3 legislative days.

W. B. BANKHEAD, Speaker.

Mr. RAYBURN assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore. The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the hope for every discouraged soul, the purity for every stained life, and the light for every starless sky, hitherto has Thou helped us. As we walk the ways of this world, hold us to the realization that men are sustained, guided, and consoled by Thy sheltering care. Grant that our life task may be to thirst for the genius of goodness, thus avoiding the harvest of wrong, injustice, and shame. Heavenly Father, take our hands and if fate deepens the current, let pain sweeten the tune and poverty enrich the melody. As the day was still in the light and the horizon widening a Member strong and upright left us and the whisperings of peace swept through the atmosphere saying: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of the Lord." In our Saviour's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 2, 1940, was read and approved.

THE LATE CASSIUS C. DOWELL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I have the solemn duty of announcing the death of my colleague the gentleman from Iowa, CASSIUS C. DOWELL, who passed away yesterday shortly before 11 o'clock in the morning.

I hope at some future time to make some remarks regarding his long life and the service he rendered to the Republic, to civilization, and to his fellow men.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, it is always with sadness and a feeling of loss that this body receives the announcement of the death of one of its Members. Particularly is this true when that Member has grown old in the service of his country. The people of Iowa and the Sixth Congressional District will miss CASSIUS DOWELL, but I think the sense of personal loss the individual Members of this body feel will be the more poignant because through the years there has developed a respect and affection which only our close association here can bring.

To his good wife and many friends our hearts go out in sympathy, and yet I cannot but feel that the God of this universe has opened his arms to CASSIUS DOWELL with the salutation, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 373

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CASSIUS C. DOWELL, a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Chair appoints as members of the funeral committee Messrs. GILCHRIST, JACOBSEN, JENSEN, and LeCOMPTE.

The Clerk will report the further resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, February 6, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1940

The Chaplain, Rev. Zebulon T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Holy Father, who hast led Thy children in all the ages with the fire and cloud, through seas dry-shod, through weary wastes bewildering, to Thee in reverent love our hearts are bowed. Help us to realize that in the region where we live and suffer it is still true that men of vision see everlasting lights, serene in their prophetic brightness.

In the midst of life's toil and weariness, in times of sorrow, in the bearing of burdens, in the world's work, as men live close to the world's uncleanness and pray for a strong and uncontaminated humanity, in anxious hours of watching by the beds of pain, in bereavement by the open grave, in loneliness when the heart feels the anguish of its solitude, and in every darkened day of life, teach us that we have only to look up and behold the heavenly ideal that guides the feet of the faithful to the light that never was on land or sea and into the peace that passeth all understanding, till life is altogether blessed in the vision of God in Christ. We ask it in our Saviour's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 2, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, Hon. JOHN THOMAS, Senator-designate from Idaho, is in the Chamber and prepared to take the oath of office. His credentials have been duly filed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the American Legion Auxiliary of New Jersey, Pleasantville, N. J., in relation to pending legislation on the subjects of adjusted compensation, Americanism, child welfare, civil service, and widows and orphans, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BYRNES presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States not to make the farmer the goat of economy

Whereas it appears in the morning press that a certain group in the Congress of the United States are demanding a 51-percent cut in next year's Agriculture Department supply; and

Whereas if this group succeeds, the farm fund will be cut from $1,301,340.315, the amount provided in 1939, to $630,374.256; and

Whereas it is a matter of common knowledge that the things produced today by the farmers of America are not bringing a parity price as compared with other articles of necessity and common use, and especially with those which he has to buy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring). That the Congress of the United States is respectfully requested and urged not to make the farmer the goat of economy, and to make ample and adequate appropriations for the Department of Agriculture; be it further

Resolved. That copies of this resolution be mailed to the United States Senators and Congressmen from this State and to the clerk of each branch of the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a memorial submitted to me by the voters of the Fifth Congressional District of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the imposition of new processing taxes on bread and other necessities of life.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial presented by the Senator from Wisconsin will be received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VANDENBERG presented memorials of sundry citizens of the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the levying of an excise tax, or any form of processing tax, on bread and other necessities of life, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. HOLT presented the petition of ladies of Unit No. 16, American Legion Auxiliary, of Huntington, W. Va., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 7593) to provide Government protection to widows and children of deceased World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. REED presented a resolution signed by Richard W. Murray, financial secretary of Galena (Kans.) Local No. 17, International Union of Mine, Mill, and Smelter Workers, protesting against reduction of the W. P. A. appropriation, and requesting adoption of the legislative program proposed by the Congress of Industrial Organizations calling for an increased W. P. A. appropriation so as to provide at least 3,000,000 jobs in 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition signed by members of Carroll Unit No. 31, American Legion Auxiliary, of Westminster, Md., praying for the enactment of the bill (H. R. 7593) to provide Government protection to widows and children of deceased World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by a regular meeting of the Maryland Democrats, Baltimore, Md., protesting against involvement of the United States in war, and also undue appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments at the expense of appropriations for the unemployed and social welfare, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Maryland State Bar Association favoring enactment of the bill (S. 915) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3016. A bill to amend the act approved February 15, 1929, entitled "An act to permit certain warrant officers to count all active service rendered under temporary appointments as warrant or commissioned officers in the Regular Navy, or as warrant or commissioned officers in the United States Naval Reserve Force, for purpose of promotion to chief warrant rank," so as to permit service in the National Naval Volunteers to be counted for purposes of promotion (Rept. No. 1178); and

S. 3067. A bill authorizing appropriations to be made for the disposition of the remains of personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps and certain civilian employees of the Navy, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1179).

Mr. WALSH also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6044) to regulate the number of warrant and commissioned warrant officers in the Marine Corps, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1180) thereon.

Mr. RADCLIFFE, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 2977) authorizing the construction and maintenance of a dike or dam across Stansbury Creek in Baltimore, Md., reported it with an amendment to the title and submitted a report (No. 1181) thereon.

RAILROAD COMBINATION IN THE EASTERN REGION (REPT. NO. 1182)

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71 (74th Cong.), submitted a report on the investigation of railroads, holding companies, and affiliated companies—railroad combination in the eastern region.

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 3282. A bill for the relief of Glenn Richard Smith; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DOWNEY:

S. J. Res. 208. Joint resolution extending the time for construction of work-relief and public-works projects until January 1, 1941; to the Committee on Appropriations.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE—NOTICE OF SPEECH

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, because of its ideal year-around climatic conditions, my native State of Florida probably has a larger per capita of old people who permanently reside there than has any other State in the Union. These fine people are very much interested in legislation of the type embodied in S. 3255, introduced by Senator DOWNEY on February 2.

Many of these constituents of mine will desire a copy of this bill, and because there are a limited number and in order to have as many copies as possible available for distribution, I am now introducing for appropriate reference a duplicate of S. 3255. I understand that other Senators will do likewise.

This virtually makes me one of the sponsors of this legislation. I am in sympathy with its purposes, as has already been indicated by the fact that I appeared before the Ways and Means Committee of the House when it was holding hearings on the former Townsend bill. As I stated at that time—

We might as well recognize this fundamental truth: That American security in the ultimate is rooted in economic contentment. To retain that security we must keep our human efforts and natural resources harnessed in productive work. Religious liberty, political liberty, economic liberty—these liberties that have made America the land of opportunity—are like the foundation of a great building. It is futile to try to save the upper stories when the foundation stones are crumbling.

A proper and efficient plan to care for our elderly citizens is absolutely essential. I concur in the principle laid down by our United States Supreme Court, "Old-age assistance and security is a national obligation and duty."

Many feel that the Social Security Act is not meeting the needs of that great class of our needy people over the age of 60 or 65 who are prohibited by the very nature of things from employment in nearly all the industries and trades.

Throughout my service in the Senate, the importance and necessity for legislation as embodied in the principles of the Townsend plan have grown increasingly apparent to me. At the first session of this Congress I introduced, for myself and in behalf of the junior Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. LODGE), Senate Joint Resolution 145, proposing a constitutional amendment which provides as follows:

The Congress shall have the power to levy taxes for old-age assistance.

This joint resolution was referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, and recently favorably recommended and reported to the Senate, and is now on the Senate Calendar. It is my intention to call it up for consideration on the floor of the Senate in the near future. Many of my colleagues have asked that I give them notice when I expect to discuss it, and I now give notice that on next Monday, as soon as I can obtain the floor after convening that day, I shall speak in behalf of my proposed amendment, and some of the principles of the legislation embodied in the bill introduced by the Senator from California.

Many feel, after weighing and analyzing every phase of our economic set-up for the security of our old people, that this is the only way to provide a substitute for permanent relief.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill introduced by the Senator from Florida will be received and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 3270) to provide for national recovery by raising revenue and retiring citizens past 60 years of age from gainful employment and provide for the general welfare of all the people of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8202) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. SHEPPARD, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 458) extending the benefits of the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, to provisional, probationary, or temporary officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard who served during the World War, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

RIVER AND HARBOR WORKS—RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

On motion by Mr. BAILEY, the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, was recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

MOUNTAIN JUDICIAL DISTRICT, TENN.—PROPOSED RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, in obedience to instructions from the Committee on the Judiciary, I ask unanimous consent for the recommitment of Calendar No. 227, Senate bill No. 1681, introduced by Mr. McKELLAR, to amend section 107 of the Judicial Code to create a mountain district in the State of Tennessee, and for other purposes, a matter in which I have no personal interest.

Mr. McKELLAR. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

AMENDMENT TO TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $700 for a gold medal to be presented to Howard Hughes in recognition of his achievements in advancing the science of aviation, in accordance with law, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 8068, the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

BLIND BROOK AND SAW MILL, BRONX, AND HUTCHINSON RIVERS, N. Y.—AMENDMENT

Mr. MEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

DOMESTIC SOURCES OF TIN—AMENDMENT

Mr. PEPPER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5840) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the protection and preservation of domestic sources of tin" approved February 15, 1936, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ASSISTANCE TO THE STATES IN HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3105) to assist the States in the improvement of highways, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

REIMBURSEMENT TO CERTAIN WISCONSIN COOPERATIVES—AMENDMENTS

Mr. WILEY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2585) to reimburse the cotton cooperative associations for losses occasioned by the Federal Farm Board's stabilization operations, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROADS, HOLDING COMPANIES, AND AFFILIATED COMPANIES

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 38), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,000 additional copies of each part and subsequent parts of Senate Report No. 1182, submitted pursuant to Senate Resolution 71 (74th Cong.), entitled "Investigation of Railroads, Holding Companies, and Affiliated Companies," of which 2,000 copies shall be for the use of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, 500 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and 500 copies for the use of the House document room.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I ask to have read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 227) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is requested to submit the following information to the Senate at its earliest convenience:

(1) What foreign nations have generalized tariff reductions or other trade favors to the United States under the unconditional most-favored-nation policy, as a result of granting such concessions to others since 1934.

(2) What are the benefits, if any, that have been thus generalized.

(3) How many bilateral-trade agreements exist between other nations, and whom between.

(4) Which of these bilateral-trade agreements, if any, have been negotiated since 1934.

(5) Whether any of the concessions in these bilateral agreements, if any, have been generalized to the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, inasmuch as this is purely a request for basic information which will shortly be essential to the study of one of the pending problems of the present Congress, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. I object.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope the Senator will let the resolution go over for a day or two.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Why should not the resolution go in the regular route to the Finance Committee, of which the Senator from Michigan is a member? Why should it have immediate consideration? I do not want to "butt in" on the Senator from Kentucky, who is in charge of business before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest that the resolution go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should it go over? Why should it not take the regular route and be sent to the Finance Committee, and let us be talking about it? That is the usual route, as I understand, that it should take.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There are divers and sundry routes.

Mr. CONNALLY. There is a right route and a wrong route.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; and the route by which a Senator is usually entitled to receive information he desires is the route which I have suggested be followed. I am quite willing, however, to yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky; and I ask that the resolution go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan referred to the right of every Senator to obtain information. Of course, I am happy to see the Senator from Michigan secure information at any time; but this resolution has implications beyond the mere request for information. There are telephones in the Senate lobby. If the Senator from Michigan really wants information, he can telephone to the Tariff Commission and in an hour have all the information.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me advise the Senator that I asked the Tariff Commission in writing for this information on January 17, and I thought I had waited about long enough.

Mr. CONNALLY. Has the Senator called up and asked why they have not answered?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I have had no acknowledgment of my letter, and I do not propose to pursue the Tariff Commission in an effort to try to get some consideration of a question which is legitimate and pertinent; and I am sure the Senator from Texas would not expect me to do more than I have done.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I would not; I would hardly have expected the Senator to do as much as he has done. But he could call up the Commission by telephone and ask why no reply has been made to his letter. However, Mr. President, that does not change the situation. The Senate has certain rules and it has certain committees. The committees are supposed to be organized for certain particular functions, and if any Senator can rise and instantaneously secure in the Senate action which a committee ought to take, then we will disrupt the whole organization of the Senate. I say that this resolution should go to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The practice is almost uniform that when information is sought from a department or a bureau of the Government a Senator merely offers a resolution and asks for its immediate consideration, or it remains on the table. It is not the practice at all to refer such resolutions to committees. A committee has not any jurisdiction over this matter; it is a question for the Senate, and a Senator is at liberty to ask for the information. I think the Senator from Michigan is quite within his rights.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly; and the Senator from Texas is quite within his rights, because it requires unanimous consent. The Senator from Texas has just as much of a vote, if not as much standing, as the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. What the Senator from Oregon has just stated is, as a rule, the practice. Frequently resolutions asking for information are considered by unanimous consent upon their presentation. It struck me, from listening to the resolution of the Senator from Michigan, that it goes a little further than does the ordinary resolution asking for information. For that reason I asked that it go over, so that we might examine it and see whether it is the usual inquiry for facts. If it is broader than the usual request for such information, I agree with the Senator from Texas that it probably should go to the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. If any Senator can do this kind of thing without consulting the Senate at all, the Senator from Michigan should have done it before the Senate met and not have taken up the time of the Senate with it. After all, it is a senatorial function that is to be performed, and the rules governing these matters are binding on all of us. Being a member of the Committee on Finance, I think that committee ought to look into this question, because it relates to matters over which that committee has jurisdiction. I am not hostile to the Senator from Michigan; I have a very great personal fondness for him; but I know that all his motives here are not personal, and we ought to go along the official route rather than pass upon these matters without consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has gone over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 to the bill (H. R. 8067) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, and that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5 to the bill.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is concluded.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not understand the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia has asked that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not think the bill has advanced to the point where I desire to interrogate the Senator from Virginia. When we arrive at the provision for civil aeronautics I desire to be heard, but not until that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the report on the desk of each Senator very precisely states the action of the committee on all items contained in the bill. Briefly, the bill as it passed the House appropriated $1,100,187,267, and the Senate committee net increase amounts to $38,506,261; so that the amount recommended in the bill as reported to the Senate is $1,138,693,528.

The amount of the appropriation for 1940 was $1,116,445,932, and the amount of the regular estimates for 1941 was $1,194,704,473. So the bill as reported to the Senate is under the estimates for 1941 by $56,010,945 and exceeds the appropriation for 1940 by $22,247,596.

Mr. President, I may state that practically the only material increase in the bill is the $39,000,000 for the Maritime Commission. Admiral Land appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and convinced us that this increase should be made, because it would not involve any increased construction, but would merely allow the Commission to complete vessels which are under contract.

An item for the National Resources Planning Board amounting to $710,000, which was stricken out in the House of Representatives on a point of order, was restored by the committee.

One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars was transferred from the Veterans' Administration to the Civil Service Commission to be available for work heretofore performed by the Council of Personnel Administration. That involves no increase in appropriation, but a transfer of a fund from one agency of the Government to another agency where it ought to be.

One million, one hundred and seventy-eight thousand, seven hundred and thirty-nine dollars was taken from the appropriation provided by the House for Civil Aeronautics, a million dollars of that amount being for maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities.

The Civil Service Commission is deprived of $200,000 for increased personnel. I may say that the Committee on Appropriations made a point of not voting for any increased personnel for any Government agency which appeared before it.

The committee also reduced the appropriation for the Public Buildings Administration in the District of Columbia by $25,000 and for the Public Road Administration by $10,000.

The chairman of the committee is willing to answer any question which may be propounded if he can. If there is no question to be asked, I ask that the first amendment of the committee be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Executive Office of the President," on page 4, after line 7, to insert:

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For all necessary administrative expenses of the National Resources Planning Board, to perform the functions transferred to said Board on July 1, 1939, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere in accordance with civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; purchase of books of reference, and periodicals; expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with development, conservation, and use of the resources of the Nation; traveling expenses; purchase of office equipment and supplies, and temporary employment of persons, $710,000, of which not to exceed $40,000 shall be available for printing and binding.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, reserving the right to make a point of order, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, what authority of law there is for this appropriation.

Mr. GLASS. I asked that question myself, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] seemed to discover some authorization for it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Under the Reorganization Act there were transferred to the National Resources Planning Board the functions of what was known as the Federal Employment Stabilization Board in the Department of Commerce. There were also transferred the functions of the National Resources Committee.

The Federal Employment Stabilization Board Act was approved February 10, 1931. It set forth the functions of that office, and section 3 specifically provided—

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually such sum as may be necessary for the expenses of the Board.

The authority therefore is contained in the act creating the Federal Employment Stabilization Office, and its specific authorization for an unlimited appropriation for the functions of that organization. By the Executive order the functions of that Board are transferred to the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, has the Senator concluded?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The argument of the Senator from South Carolina simply amounts to saying that by taking some functions from an agency which is authorized by law, and transferring them to an agency which is not authorized by law, you vitalize and give authorization to the unauthorized agency, with much greater functions and scope and authority than the original authorized agency had. It is the same as saying that by taking a small child and putting it in the same box with a monster dummy the monster dummy is vitalized and given the breath of life.

Mr. President, there is no authority whatever for the National Resources Planning Board. It is true that under the Executive order referred to certain functions authorized by law in another agency are transferred to this unauthorized agency; but I present the question to the Chair whether that constitutes authority for the National Resources Planning Board, with a far greater scope of activities than contemplated in the act to which the Senator from South Carolina has referred. I, therefore, make the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina does not argue that the National Resources Planning Board can exercise any greater function than the function of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board. Under the Reorganization Act the President had the power to transfer the functions of that Board to any other agency. When he transferred them, he transferred no more and no less than the functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board. Those functions were transferred, and the authorization for an appropriation is unlimited, and, therefore, I am sure the proposal is in order.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have nothing to say except that I think it may be proper to state that the President in the memorandum to the Speaker of the House, submitted too late to be considered, assumed the position that the Executive never interfered with the expenses of the legislative branch of the Government, and he does not think that the Senate ought to interfere with the Executive expenses. But that is a question of the merits of the proposition and does not relate to the point of order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. The point made by the Senator from Missouri, by means of his rather drastic illustration of putting a small baby in the same box or basket with a monstrous dummy, seems to be somewhat out of order, because the Board was an agency which had been created by Executive order and it was alive. While it may have lacked a specific act of Congress creating it originally, it was created by Executive order, as I recall. That is correct, is it?

Mr. BYRNES. The Planning Board?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. The President simply gave a new name to the agency. The agency continued. There is no question about it being alive and having all the power that the Congress gave it. The title is changed from Federal Employment Stabilization Board to National Resources Planning Board. Under the reorganization act there can be no question of the power of the President to transfer one, two, or three agencies to another agency and give to the newly created agency a new title.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with the Senator, but even if it be assumed that some of the functions originally performed by the National Resources Planning Board might lapse, by reason of lack of appropriation or lack of authority, certainly those functions that are transferred to it would not lapse and they would continue in existence.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think there can be any question about it. Under the Reorganization Act the President can transfer the functions of one, two, or three agencies to another organization, calling it by a new name; and when that is done the newly created agency has the power to administer all the functions transferred, unless there is some provision which would prevent the transfer of the functions of one of the three agencies. If that were true, certainly it would not affect the exercise by the newly created agency of the function of the two agencies that were transferred.

I will state to the Senator from Kentucky that an estimate was submitted for another agency—the National Emergency Council. After making an investigation I believed it was subject to a point of order, and I did not ask and did not believe it should be included in the bill. I have no doubt as to the correctness of the position I have taken, that since the functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board are administered by the National Resources Planning Board, the amendment is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator this question: In view of the fact that the President has transferred the functions of this other agency to the National Resources Planning Board, and that the transfer in effect has been ratified by Congress, what would happen to the functions thus transferred to the National Resources Planning Board if this appropriation should fall by reason of the point of order being sustained or for any other reason? Could the functions be revitalized in the agency from which they were transferred, or would they collapse?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if the point of order were sustained the bill would go back to the committee in the first place. If what the Senator suggests occurs, there simply would be no money for carrying out the functions. I do not think it affects the question. I do not think there can be the slightest doubt that there is authority of law for carrying out those functions, and nothing more.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I am inclined to agree with the views of the able Senator from South Carolina with regard to the point of order made by the able Senator from Missouri. That does not mean that I favor this appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I was not discussing the merits. I thought we would reach them in due time.

Mr. McNARY. Yes. I rather think the committee should have conformed to the House's attitude by leaving out the item; but I also think the point of order cannot be sustained, because I recall that this organization was once called the National Resources Committee—

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. And that was established by authority of law, passed by both branches of the Congress, and signed by the President. An Executive order was subsequently made transferring its functions to the National Resources Planning Board. Consequently, the base has not been altered and is entirely supported by statutory enactment. Its name has been changed, and its functions have been somewhat changed. I want to make this as a voluntary contribution, because I am not wholly in accord with the provisions of the measure; but, in view of the fact that the point of order has been raised, it is my judgment that the point of order should be overruled.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to say that the Senator is correct as to the Federal Employment Stabilization Board. The National Resources Planning Board was created by Executive order.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement was made by the Senator from South Carolina that if the point of order were sustained the bill would have to go back to the committee. My inquiry is whether it is not possible to make a point of order against a provision in the bill as distinguished from a point of order against the bill? The rules provide that a point of order may be made against the bill if it includes general legislation, which would send the bill back to the committee. My point is whether or not it is possible to make a point of order against the amendment. I am asking for my own information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has heretofore held that if a point of order to an amendment of this type is sustained, it does not require that the bill go back to the committee.

Mr. GLASS. That is a departure from the regular order, Mr. President. The rules require that it should go back if the point of order is sustained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that he is not passing on any question, but answered the parliamentary inquiry made by the Senator from Colorado. If a point of order is made against the bill, then, under the rules, if the point of order is sustained the bill must go back to the committee. If a point of order is made to a proposed amendment to the bill and the point of order is sustained such ruling does not require the bill to go back to the committee.

The Chair is about to rule on the point of order.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question on this matter before the vote is taken. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina says that the functions of the Civil Unemployment Agency—I believe that is the name—

Mr. BYRNES. Federal Employment Stabilization Office.

Mr. GEORGE. The functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Office were transferred to the National Resources Planning Board. What I wished to ask was what sum of money heretofore was set aside for the agency whose functions were transferred to the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say, Mr. President, that I do not know. The act was passed in 1931. Then the agency was in the Department of Commerce, and the money that was used came out of the appropriations for the Department of Commerce. I could not say how much.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand, it is the contention of the Senator from South Carolina that the National Resources Planning Board can exercise only the functions of this agency?

Mr. BYRNES. That is my view.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I think the Senate ought to have some information as to how much they have had heretofore.

Mr. BYRNES. The functions of that organization, as set forth in the act creating it, are practically the same as the functions set forth in the message of the President as to the Executive order. Some of those functions are described as follows:

Sec. 6. Such emergency appropriations are authorized and shall be expended only—

(a) For carrying out the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as now or hereafter amended and supplemented;

(b) For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore and hereafter authorized as may be most desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation;

(c) For prosecuting flood-control projects heretofore or hereafter authorized;

(d) For carrying into effect the provisions of the Public Buildings Act, approved May 25, 1926, as now or hereafter amended and supplemented, in respect of public buildings within and without the District of Columbia; and

(e) For prosecuting such other construction as may now or hereafter be authorized by the Congress, and which is or may be included in the 6-year advance plans, as hereinafter provided.

Those are the functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 4, at the end of line 21, to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following language:

Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated under this item shall be used for the performance of any functions or duties other than the functions heretofore authorized by law to be performed by the Federal Employment Stabilization Board.

Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to conform to the authority of law for this appropriation, as asserted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and as ruled by the Chair. As I understand, the Senator from South Carolina concedes that the National Resources Planning Board has no authority of law whatever for existence except the Executive order transferring the functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Therefore it seems to me to be entirely proper to limit this appropriation to the functions authorized by law to be performed by the transferred agency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the first committee amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. GLASS. I ask for a division.

On a division the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to oppose the amendment as a whole. The House struck out of the bill and abolished the National Resources Planning Board, and also the Press Intelligence Service, formerly the National Emergency Council.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I understood the Senator to say that the House struck out this item. I wonder if the Senator has verified that statement. According to my information the fact is that it was not reported by the committee. The committee report stated that under the rules of the House it would not be reported, and it was not acted upon by the House at all.

Mr. TAFT. I acknowledge that it was the House committee which eliminated both these agencies which our committee now proposes to restore, one of them through the pending measure, and the other, I understand, in the relief appropriation bill, if it can be done.

I do not see that the National Resources Planning Board is performing a service which is worth continuing. If Senators will refer to the House committee hearings, I suppose the statement of Mr. Delano, the chairman, is as good a statement as any of what the Board is doing:

1. The conduct of special studies and investigations of problems of national policy in cooperation with the various Federal departments and agencies concerned.

Some studies are being carried on, but there is no reason why those studies cannot be carried on by other departments. When we examine the testimony further, we find:

We hope that other studies can be carried on, where they are warranted, by other regular departments, as soon as their usefulness is demonstrated.

Dr. Hildegaard Kneeland and her staff have been working now for some years in producing three large reports on consumer income and consumer expenditures. That work is now drawing to a close and it will be continued partly by the Department of Agriculture and partly by the Department of Commerce.

I do not see anything set out in this report as actually being done by the Board which cannot be done by some of the regular departments of government.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Assuming that the several departments of the Government are doing a good job in the collection of data and the making of analyses, does the Senator know of any agency of the Government whose duty it is to correlate and coordinate the activities of the Federal agencies in the collection of data and the making of analyses? In other words, is there any Federal agency or any department, other than the National Resources Planning Board, which obtains the whole vision and the whole view of the country, and thinks of the proper relationship of the development of one part of it to another, and to the whole?

Mr. TAFT. If it is merely a matter of coordinating the reports and telling each department which field to cover, I do not see why one of the six secretaries to the President, for whom we provided the funds, cannot do the work. I do not see why one man cannot accomplish that purpose, if all that is desired is to coordinate and see that various activities do not overlap, and that the whole thing is considered in the light of the entire situation. We do not have to spend $710,000 on several hundred employees to do this proposed coordinating work—to do it over again, if you please, after some other department of the Government has already done it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. TAFT. Surely.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator has examined the work which the National Resources Planning Board has done during its existence, will he be kind enough to tell us what particular phase of its work he objects to and thinks not worth while?

Mr. TAFT. I do not object to any of it. I say that whatever has been done could have been done by the regular departments under the direction of the President. We have provided plenty of personnel for the President to assume that direction and do that work.

This is the main emphasis in Mr. Delano's testimony:

We are now inaugurating, with the approval of the President, two major undertakings, one on national relief policy—

Congress has a committee on national relief policy which is studying the question, and which could well make that study—and the other, the various aspects of the transportation problem.

Certainly many agencies of the Federal Government are engaged in that study, and we are about to pass a law giving the Interstate Commerce Commission general power over all transportation agencies, so that it can make the study.

It is our hope that reports on these studies may be available about a year from now.

If we are to study relief, it seems to me that if somebody cannot make a report on national relief policy in less than a year from now, we might just as well suspend the operation of that particular Department.

The other half of their work, they say, is for what they call decentralized planning.

Through nine regional offices we have assisted State and interstate planning agencies in the solution of their planning problems. Our board believes that there is a great opportunity for service—

And so forth.

I cannot understand why we should help State planning agencies. Why can they not do their own planning?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. TAFT. I will yield in a moment.

On page 32 of the House hearings there is a list of employees. It shows that they have a Director at $8,500; a Chief, Division of Research, at $8,000; an Economic Adviser at $8,000; an Assistant Director at $7,000; an executive officer at $6,500; a senior attorney at $5,200; an executive engineer on the Water Resources Committee at $6,000; an economic adviser on energy and minerals at $8,500; a head transportation economist at $7,000; a head economist in Studies of Relief Policies and Migration at $7,000; and a chief of field service at $8,000.

There are nine regional offices scattered throughout the United States, each with a clerical force of its own. There are counselors who are paid as much as $7,200. There are a number of them at $6,800 and two of them at $7,200. Altogether, the list represents a large number of high-salaried employees; and, so far as I can see, they have not performed any useful service.

I do not say that what they do is bad. It may prove to be quite good. However, if the Board were eliminated tomorrow I do not think there is any work they are doing which could not be performed by other Government departments and done as well as it is being done by the Board.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether or not he has ever known of the National Resources Planning Board making any report to Congress or to any committee of Congress in reference to any public works.

Mr. TAFT. I do not know; I would not be free to state that no report has been made, but I do not think any important report has ever been completed and submitted to the Congress for action. I think there have been some reports in the nature of progress reports.

Mr. OVERTON. I will state to the Senator that I am now, and have been for 7 or 8 years, a member of the Commerce Committee. That committee, as the Senator knows, has jurisdiction over rivers and harbors and flood control. It is presumed that one of the main purposes of the Resources Planning Board is to coordinate plans affecting rivers and harbors and flood control, but I have never known of a report by the Board or its predecessor, the National Resources Committee, being submitted to the Commerce Committee.

Mr. TAFT. I do not know as to that. I notice one report is referred to. One of the most recent of the studies printed was entitled "Energy Resources and National Policy." I have not seen that report, but I do not understand that it is a final report in any nature but simply a progress report.

Mr. OVERTON. One of the duties of the National Resources Planning Board and the National Resources Committee, its predecessor, was to make reports from time to time to Congress. That is prescribed as one of the duties. I do not know of any reports that have ever been made to any committee on any subject.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that the National Resources Planning Board and the National Resources Committee do not make reports to the Congress unless the Congress asks for reports.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not true that there being no authorization by law for the Committee, of course, no duties are imposed on the Committee; but should it not make reports to the Congress as it completes its reports?

Mr. BYRNES. It is the duty of the National Resources Committee in the Executive Office of the President to make reports to the President, but it does not make reports to the Congress unless it is asked to do so. Its reports are of a factual nature. It could not make reports to the Congress unless the Congress by law directed that it should do so or should invite it to do so.

Mr. TAFT. The remarks of the learned Senator from South Carolina indicate that if we are to have a national planning board it ought to be set up by statute; its duties ought to be prescribed, including reports to the Congress; the whole program ought to be outlined, and Congress should specify exactly what it wants, and not simply hand $710,000 to some board to do whatever they please, so far as I can see, with the money.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TAFT. I yield first to the Senator from Florida, who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator said that, so far as he knew, the States were doing their own planning. I was going to ask the Senator if he knew of any other agency than this under the Federal Government whose activities might tend to coordinate the planning of the several State agencies for regional development? For example, the Southeastern Planning Conference was recently held in Hollywood, Fla., and at that conference State planning agencies and the Governors and some of the leaders of the several States were brought together in one group for the purpose of considering regional planning. I will ask the Senator if he thinks that the States would do that themselves if they did not have a suggestion of that character from some coordinating agency?

Mr. TAFT. The State planning boards are largely supported by this Board and by W. P. A. funds that are allotted to them. For instance, there is listed in the general accomplishments of this Federal Board a community-development handbook in New Hampshire entitled "Your Home Town." There is a weekly release in Pennsylvania entitled "Know Your State"; another one called What Kansas Produces. The State boards are working all over the United States on all these local problems, and the Federal Government is largely supporting them and doing a good deal of work for them, apparently, and in other cases the W. P. A. is furnishing the funds with which they can do it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. With reference to any report that has ever been made by the National Resources Committee or the National Resources Planning Board to the Congress or to anybody else, I agree with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] that there was no requirement that it should report directly to the Congress. But I recall that about a year ago the President transmitted to the Congress a very exhaustive and voluminous report made by the National Resources Planning Board on a number of subjects, one of which was stream pollution; another was with respect to the development of our natural resources; another dealt with the question of recreation facilities in connection with the development of our natural resources. It was a voluminous report. I do not know whether or not any Senator has read it. I studied it in part; I did not have the time to master it all; but I say that it contained a very great amount of valuable information upon the natural resources of the United States with suggestions as to their utilization. I also recall that that report was made to the President and that he transmitted it to the Congress about a year ago.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to read a part of the testimony of Mr. Eliot, director of the National Resources Planning Board, who sets forth a paternalistic idea of the function of the Federal Government, which I think is rather interesting:

We have supposed that it was desirable to encourage the States to do their own planning and their own thinking, and we try to keep in touch with the States and to encourage them as time goes along in those activities in which we are particularly concerned.

That is the function in which they are engaged—teaching the States to think for themselves. I think it is a function we can well leave to the States; at least the State of Ohio is well able to think for itself.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think I have heard of something of late which indicates some doubt as to whether or not Ohio has thought for itself very much. If I recall correctly, a little while ago the city of Cleveland, Ohio, knocking meanwhile at the door of the Federal Treasury, appeared before the country in a rather sad light. Although Ohio is a very honorable and a very great State, I am not at all sure that there has been the right kind of thinking and the right kind of planning in Ohio. If there had been the right kind of planning in Ohio, there would not have been in the city of Cleveland the preposterous paradox of the steel mills and other industrial units running at full speed and production at full pitch and volume and the great load of unemployment and the sad spectacle of suffering experienced there. It may be that such a situation as that at Cleveland indicates the right kind of thinking; it may be that it indicates economic equilibrium; it may be that it indicates far-sightedness; it may be that it indicates vision; and it may be it does not indicate any of them.

All the Resources Planning Board was designed to do was to make a study of the factual data that lies at the basis of the economy of this country, to try to stimulate where stimulation was desirable, to correlate where correlation would be helpful, and to endeavor to make the most harmonious economic order it was possible for us to have in this country.

If we find that, as a technical matter, there is no legal authority for the existence of the National Resources Planning Board, it is perfectly proper for any Senator to say that an agency of that character should have reason in the law itself and in the law's language. I make no protest against arguments based upon that ground, but I sincerely hope the Senate will not by what it does here, and the manner in which it does it, indicate to the country that we think it is preposterous to have a qualified agency that will try to plan as best it can a harmonious economy for the United States of America.

I mentioned a few moments ago the Southeastern Planning Conference, which was held in Florida in December, which was attended by the Governors and other representatives of several of the Southeastern States. It met to consider a problem common to the southeastern part of the United States. There have been a few men in this body who have had vision which has been wrought into reality in the development of a great section. I refer to that incomparable spirit who has been for many years one of the great and illustrious names in this Senate, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who had a vision of the development of the Tennessee Valley and the relationship of the question of flood control and power production and agriculture and soil economy and reforestation, new life to an undeveloped agriculture, and a new hope and horizon for many people. That development came to reality because someone had vision enough to see a whole section instead of merely one locality.

I am a member of the Commerce Committee, which deals with river and harbor projects, but I have never heard in the few years I have been there of any Senator getting up and exhibiting a plan for a correlation of flood-control projects and river and harbor projects that in all its ramifications involved the development of a great area. I have never even heard of the Army engineers coming in with a comprehensive plan. They make reports upon specific projects that are submitted to them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I recall to the mind of the Senator that a very comprehensive plan for the reclamation of the arid lands and flood control and everything else was reported from the Commerce Committee as long ago as 1913, during the chairmanship of the late Senator from Nevada, Mr. Newlands.

Mr. PEPPER. It may be that it was so long ago that it has grown somewhat musty, and that my inattention to it is accountable for the fact that I have not seen it. If it is due to my own inattention, I express regret. But I can think of but few instances of a comprehensive plan for the development of an area. The Mississippi River has been an instance, but it has taken many years and untiring labor on the part of many interested Members of Congress and of the Army engineers. That, however, is the exception, Senators, instead of the rule. That is what I mean to say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Forty-three of the forty-eight States now have planning boards, and it is almost necessary to have a central planning board in which the work of the various other planning boards may be coordinated. As the Senator from Ohio a few moments ago said, there were regional offices, but provision for the regional offices has been stricken from this amendment. They were in the original amendment, but they have been stricken from it, and I think properly so.

Mr. PEPPER. I merely want to say, in conclusion, that at a time such as this in world affairs, when governments are groping for some answer to their problems, and some of them have found the answer, they think, in regimentation and by governmental fiat and order have regimented the people of their countries, I am one of those who think that the antidote for that, the antithesis of it, is vision and planning and guidance and leadership of an affirmative character that will show how our resources may be developed and our economic order brought into equilibrium, so that we can have plenty for the people of the country, an opportunity to work for all, and fair prosperity for every section. I hope, therefore, that we shall do more planning instead of less of it, because I think it is characteristic of the genius of a democracy that it has a great vision of what may be done.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the best way to judge the future is by the past. When we entered the depression, and it was determined that men should be put to work as a national policy, everyone thought of major public works, well planned and well organized. We appropriated $3,300,000,000 in the first relief bill, and then undertook to find good, substantial projects on which to expend the money. There were very few of them. Wherever they could be found, the President allocated sufficient money to finish the project completely, even though it would take 2, 3, or 4 years; but there had been no planning agency of any kind operating in any coordinated manner throughout the entire United States. What happened? We created at the same time another agency, which became the Works Progress Administration and which was designed to put men to work quickly on minor projects where no particular amount of planning was required. It soon developed that that agency could put men to work, whereas the agencies which had to do more substantial work that required long-time planning had no plans, and the work could not be done. The result was that very soon the W. P. A. expanded in numbers, and the money allocated by the President to that agency was exhausted. In order to provide more funds for the W. P. A., the President was compelled to withdraw from almost every public-works project in the country the money allocated to complete it, leaving only sufficient for the 1 year. There was such a lag, so much delay in carrying out well-considered, well-planned projects because of the lack of planning and the lack of foresight that the Public Works Administration was criticized throughout the entire Nation because it did not put men to work. On the other hand, the Works Progress Administration did put men to work, and it grew until it became the major item of expenditure in the relief appropriations.

The lesson to be learned from this is that there should be a planning agency. It has been advocated for years by every engineering society in the country. Mr. Hoover advocated it when he was the Secretary of Commerce; and if the Congress had listened to his advice at that time we would have had an agency created that could have provided excellent projects to be undertaken in the period of distress.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator know how much of this $710,000 is to be used for preparing this Federal works program?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not prepared to answer the Senator as to how this particular sum of money is to be divided; but the Senator from Ohio takes the position that nothing at all should be done.

Mr. TAFT. I notice that—

Mr. HAYDEN. I want to pin the Senator down at that point. He is opposed to this entire appropriation, so the amount of it does not concern him.

Mr. TAFT. Because the work can be done by the regular departments of the Federal Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. The reason I advocate it is that it cannot be done by the regular departments of the Federal Government.

Mr. TAFT. What is the purpose of the Federal Works Agency which was just created if not to make plans for carrying out public works?

Mr. HAYDEN. Making plans may be a part of that Agency's purpose, but its major purpose is to carry out the plans after they are made. When the Senator has been here a little longer he will know that every agency of the Government that is engaged in spending money thinks its work is the most important in the whole Government; and if there is no coordination from the top, the result is that whatever agency can make the best impression upon committees of Congress or upon the Budget Bureau will get the money, without any systematic planning. Whether it will take $710,000 a year or half a million dollars or $2,000,000 I am not prepared to say; but I object to the argument made by the Senator from Ohio that no agency of any kind at all is necessary; that we should allow the Reclamation Service to get just as much money as it can for reclamation projects; that we should allow the Board of Army Engineers to get just as much money as they can for rivers and harbors works, and so on through the various agencies of the Government.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator suggest that this is a sort of budget commission that is going to limit the expenditures of the Congress?

Mr. HAYDEN. Exactly so. It is to advise the President in preparing the Budget.

Mr. TAFT. Can the Senator show anything in that line that this committee has ever done?

Mr. HAYDEN. Undoubtedly the committee has assisted the President in this way, because I have heard the complaint made, coming from the Board, that the President limited them under normal conditions and told them that about all this country could afford to spend for public works of all kinds was $500,000,000 a year, and that they should work up a schedule of priorities; and the statement was made that the Board would like to interfere with a pet hobby of mine, the highway appropriations.

The Board is entitled to pass judgment on such questions, and I have no objection to its doing so. It is entirely sound that we should consider the construction of public roads in connection with public buildings or reclamation projects or whatever matters the Government may undertake. The point I wish to make is that the things that are going to stand out to the credit of this administration are the substantial public works that have been constructed, such as highways, rivers and harbors, public buildings, and reclamation projects. In the case of those things we shall have something to show for our money in the years to come. In the case of the millions, the billions we have spent on ill-planned projects, they have been the best we could do in a hurry to find jobs for men. The reason we had nothing better was because no plan had been made, and it is only sound common sense that an agency of this kind should be in existence to make such plans for the future.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do.

Mr. ADAMS. The Labor Stabilization Act, the functions of which are now recognized in this bill, establishes a 6-year planning scheme. It compels every construction department of the Government to work out plans covering a 6-year period. It requires that those recommendations go to the President. It directs the President to send to Congress special messages, and authorizes appropriations within a very broad limit. I was surprised to find what was included in the Labor Stabilization Act; and I may say to the Senator from Ohio that the act was passed in 1931.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, my only reason for intruding in this discussion is that I happen to be the author of the Federal Employment Stabilization Act here under discussion. I pressed it to enactment in 1931, when there was a Republican Senate and a Republican House. I had introduced it first in 1928, as a result of some study I had undertaken and recommendations that had been made from time to time by engineers, and by President Hoover when he was Secretary of Commerce, for the purpose of providing an agency that would plan public works 6 years in advance.

One Senator asked a moment ago whether this Board had ever done any work, and whether the Congress had ever utilized its work. As a matter of fact we did in 1932 and 1933. I shall come to that in just a moment. The purpose of the plan was to devise a reasonable, workable method of securing at least the cooperation of the Federal Government and its agencies in preventing the constant cycles of depressions and booms, in mitigating the economic effects of business cycles. We hoped to make some contribution toward stabilizing our national economy. An Employment Stabilization Board was established, with a director whose duty it was to keep in constant touch with all of the economic factors which determined cyclical economic trends, and to plan and coordinate our public works in the interest of business stability and employment.

The Director, Colonel Sawyer, was selected and appointed by President Hoover. He at once began the collection of statistics. Also every Federal agency that engaged in public construction had a representative on the Board. The difficulty theretofore had been that no method of coordinating their work had existed, so that our public works had been constructed in a haphazard manner. The idea was first to prepare our plans, make the surveys, and be all ready to go on with the public construction the moment the need was shown and Congress made its appropriation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Do I understand that in spite of the creation of this agency all of this waste has occurred since, under the present administration, as the Senator from Arizona has stated?

Mr. WAGNER. That question does not enter into our consideration. I am trying to give a history of the enactment of the law and what it was intended to accomplish, and what I think it will accomplish if we are patient.

At any rate, Colonel Sawyer began at once, in 1931, to collect the economic statistics, and of course we were going down, down, down, deeper and deeper into the depression. By 1932 he had prepared a program of public works, though not for 6 years ahead, because he had not had time to do that. By the way, all this occurred while our friends on the other side were in control. They accepted our cooperation, and it was not the work of any particular party at all. The bill was passed unanimously in this body and in the House of Representatives.

In 1932, when some of us on this side prepared a bill for public works, we went to see President Hoover about it. He agreed to a program of public works to help reduce the unemployment which then existed. The theory of advanced planning, as I have said, was that as our economic barometer came down, which meant that unemployment was on the increase, the United States Government would step in with its public works in an effort to absorb those whom private industry could not employ. As the barometer went up, and we got back to a normal condition, and unemployment had diminished, the public agencies would retard their activities. That was the plan, to try to keep the barometer steady.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. What machinery would the Senator recommend to regulate this up-and-down movement? Would he have Congress give to the National Resources Planning Board the power to regulate?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no; the law does not provide for that at all. All the Board has to do is to prepare the plans for public construction, to survey, and to attend to all the preliminary matters which have to be done before actual construction is begun. The report is already made for the President and for Congress. If the barometer indicated that a depression was on the way, instead of waiting, as we have in the past waited, until we got right down to the bottom and then begin to do something, we would be in a position to step right in and stop the further downward trend by putting the unemployed to work on public works.

The Board's report was to be made, the projects were to be all ready, by cooperation between all of the departments, and then the report would come to the Committee on Appropriations. They would be informed of the economic situation, and then it would be up to Congress to determine whether or not money should be appropriated for the specific projects.

There is no power of any kind taken away from Congress to determine the selection of projects, whether they want the appropriations made, and then actually to make them.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from New York agree with the Senator from Arizona that this Board should take the place of the Budget Bureau?

Mr. WAGNER. I did not hear the Senator make any such statement. He merely talked about planning in advance, and I think that is one of the finest contributions we can make toward preventing these cyclical movements up and down. It has not yet been done effectively, because the law was enacted when we were already in a serious depression, and there was not time. We had to get our public works started in a hurry. But we passed a public-works bill in the Senate in 1932, and included projects which Colonel Sawyer had reported were all ready to go, and on which they would be prepared to begin construction within 60 days, and thus relieve the unemployment situation. The Board's planning work also made possible the rapid construction of Federal projects under the P. W. A. program beginning in 1933, when this present administration came into office.

Let me say that I do not know of any better contribution we could make toward stabilizing our economy than the preparation of public-works plans 6 years in advance. We now go at this matter in a haphazard way, and we have done so for a long time. We might construct public projects when there was no unemployment at all, when it was difficult to get skilled workers, and we might be taking them away from private industry, which was prepared to employ them. The proper time for the Government to engage in public construction is when private industry is not in a position to absorb the unemployed, and we should stop engaging in public construction the moment private industry is in a position to absorb the unemployed. In that way the Government could be a very strong factor in preventing the dreaded business cycles.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator realize that only a small proportion of the $710,000 is used for anything like settling the question of public works? As far as I can discover, of the total appropriation of $710,000 probably not over $100,000 is used for the purpose which the Senator is extolling.

Mr. WAGNER. I think whatever money is spent intelligently on planning is a contribution toward a better economic system. There is no doubt about that. I am speaking only of advanced planning for public construction. That was provided in a bill which I advocated for several years, and which was passed and approved by the President. For a while the law worked effectively, but we were not able to take full advantage of it. Reference has been made to the appropriation of $3,300,000,000, which was in another measure which I had in charge, and which I sponsored. But we had to allocate most of the moneys for local projects, municipal and State projects. However, a considerable volume of Federal projects were first approved and gotten under way, based on the preliminary work of the Board. We had to rely largely, however, upon the projects sponsored by local authorities, and we made loans and grants for them. The present Planning Board has authority to consult with States and localities in local and regional public-works planning, so that it will be far more effective than its predecessor.

The fact that criticism may have been made in the past on the ground that this plan has not been as effectively operated as it should have been is no reason for destroying a very worthy law, on which there is general agreement by students of the subject.

At the time the bill was before us I put into the RECORD, for the information of the Senate and of Congress generally, a list of economists from all over the country who approved that particular piece of legislation as a step toward helping us to prevent these cycles.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator know of any general study being made on the subject of preventing booms and depressions by the National Resources Committee such as that being made by the Temporary National Economic Committee of the Congress?

Mr. WAGNER. I am not well enough informed on all the activities of this Board to answer the question. There are others here who can give the Senator the information. I am intensely interested in the particular phase of the work which is included in the Stabilization Act, because I happen to be thoroughly acquainted with it, and I think it can be effectively used to help us in reaching a more workable national program of public works.

Not through any research on my part, but as a result of information given to me, it was indicated that in many instances the largest public-works program conducted by the Federal Government had been carried on at a time when there was no unemployment at all, the Government at the time competing with private industry for skilled labor. That was an uneconomical way of conducting our public-works program. The sound way to help our private industries and to build up our economy is to carry on public construction when private industry is lagging, and to taper off public construction when private industry is booming.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator see any reason why all of that work program should not be presented to and carried out by the Public Works Agency? Have we not tried to concentrate in one department everything the Government is doing in the way of public works, and why should this not, if it must be continued, be transferred to them, and let the rest of the bureaus be abolished entirely, and get rid of another complete additional set-up of technicians and every other kind of men, on high salaries, who, so far as I can see, are performing no functions the Government cannot perform in other departments?

Mr. WAGNER. I do not agree with the Senator that this work can be centered in one department. I have forgotten just how many different agencies have to do with public construction. I am sure the Senator from Arizona can tell me.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is almost no limit to the number.

Mr. WAGNER. At any rate, there are so many agencies that there must be a central board of some kind to keep in touch with all these agencies, and to get their reports as to what public projects they think ought to be undertaken. Then the central agency can begin the preparation of surveys, and do all of the things which are necessary before actual construction starts. All that information must be transmitted to a central bureau, if the work is to be done intelligently. In the long run, it means a saving of money to do it that way, and I should think it would be very unfortunate if this particular board should be abolished.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in connection with the item for the National Resources Planning Board, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD an article from The American City in the issue of February 1940, under the headline "Is forethought too costly for democracy?"

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the American City for February 1940]

IS FORETHOUGHT TOO COSTLY FOR DEMOCRACY?

Is it worth 1 cent per annum to the average citizen of the United States to have an agency in Washington that is constantly planning for the conservation and best use of the Nation's resources, public and private, and is also aiding substantially in the work of State and local planning boards?

That question has become one of immediate urgency because of elimination by the House of Representatives last month from the independent offices supply bill of the $1,060,000 requested by the President for continuance next year of the work of the National Resources Planning Board. As the United States News puts it, "Present Congress idea is to slap at the White House with cuts in pet Presidential projects."

There may be fun in slapping at the White House, but some kinds of slaps may be too silly to be politically wise, and too costly to be economically sound.

One of the major present challenges to the American system of government is to prove that a democracy can plan more wisely and function more effectively than a dictatorship. Planning, or organized foresight, is obviously needed at all three levels of government—National, State, and local. It is with the local level—that of the municipality and the county—that most readers of the American City are, of course, mainly concerned. Here the National Resources Planning Board has been rendering important service not by attempting to control local planning from Washington but mainly by helping to set up and stimulate the activities of State planning boards, which in turn are enabling county and municipal planning to proceed more effectively than would otherwise be possible. Aid to local planning has also been given in various ways, including the so-called urbanism studies published or in press.

In the first of these monographs, Our Cities; Their Role in the National Economy, an ideal relationship between national and local planning was stressed:

"It is not the business of the United States Government to assume responsibility for the solution of purely local problems any more than it is the business of local governments to assume primary responsibility for the settlement of national problems. Yet the United States Government cannot properly remain indifferent to the common life of American citizens simply because they happen to be found in what we call cities. The sanitation, the education, the housing, the working and living conditions, the economic security—in brief, the general welfare of all its citizens—are American concerns, insofar as they are within the range of Federal power and responsibility under the Constitution."

COMMERCE AND INDUSTRY PLAN; WHY NOT THE GOVERNMENT?

In a paper prepared for the annual convention of the American Public Works Association, held in Pittsburgh last October, John M. Carmody, Administrator of the Federal Works Agency, pointed out that the principles involved in the advance planning of expenditures for construction work are not a new thing. Commerce and industry have applied them for many years. But, continued Mr. Carmody:

"Private enterprise has, of course, always measured the returns to be expected from the investment in terms of dollars. Governmental agencies cannot always measure the value of public-works projects by a monetary yardstick. For example, what dollar value could one place on a stream-pollution project—even though it is obvious that such a project is a health-protective measure, that it has definite social and recreational value, and that it means a definite increase in property values which will ultimately show up in increased tax receipts to the community?"

"Likewise, while it has been shown that slum-clearance projects have a definite relationship to the curtailment of disease, crime, and fire hazards, all of which cost the public money, we have not yet discovered a formula by which to measure the monetary savings. Certain projects, such as toll bridges and waterworks, are of course revenue producing and provide economies and public services, but other projects which produce social benefits only can often be said to be of greater value to the community."

"Despite the relatively large volume of emergency construction which has been undertaken in the past several years, our records indicate that the needs of the people for vital public services have not yet been met. We are behind in school construction by about two and one-half billion dollars. Over 100,000 obsolete one-room schools still cover the countryside, while almost 40 percent of our educational buildings are over 30 years old. They are obsolete and are in urgent need of replacement. Hundreds of small municipalities and unincorporated communities are still dependent upon the well and pump and rain barrel for their water supply. Streams bordering and flowing through some of the most important cities are polluted, endangering the health of the residents, lowering real property values, and discouraging the location of new industry. Hospital facilities, in all but a very few metropolitan areas, are woefully inadequate. While notable progress has been made in the elimination of grade crossings on major highways, in the cities themselves the problem is only now being undertaken on a comprehensive scale. The slum clearance carried forward in the last few years has barely scratched the surface."

Regardless of how opinion may differ as to the wisdom of liberal public spending as an aid to private industry and to the reduction of unemployment, there can be no intelligent advocacy of the sheer waste that results from lack of planning. To assume that the public welfare can be advanced by the elimination of planning agencies from our governmental system is to go contrary to common sense and to the experience of successful business enterprises.

Congress would be well advised to restore the appropriation of the National Resources Planning Board, and to enact legislation making that agency a permanent arm of the Federal Government for which an adequate annual appropriation would be a matter of course.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope very much that the pending committee amendment will not be agreed to. This agency is one of the 80 new agencies which have been added to the Federal Government in the past few years. I think that in its accomplishments it shows less for the actual money expended than any other agency of the Government.

If, as has been said here today, the purpose of this agency is merely to coordinate the activities of the other departments of the Government, certainly that object can be attained for a much smaller expenditure than $710,000 a year. If the purpose is to present a plan for the prevention of depressions long in advance, 6 or 7 years in advance, as the Senator from New York has said, to determine whether or not we are to have a depression, and to regulate the expenditures of the Government in accordance with whether there is a boom or a depression, then I say that during the 8 years this agency has been in existence no worth while report along that line has been submitted to the Congress of the United States, nor, so far as I know, has any such report been prepared.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The agency was in existence since 1931, and I tried to recall to the Senator that in 1932 the agency reported to the Congress the public works for which authority had been given. It had only had 6 or 7 months' time in which to prepare the 6-year program, and there were not as many projects authorized as there would have been had the agency been in existence for a longer period of time. But whatever was prepared was helpful to us, because we were able to begin our public construction within 6 months. However, the depression had gone so far along that that construction was not sufficient to halt the downward movement.

May I now ask the Senator this question? Does not the Senator believe that it is the intelligent thing to construct our public works at a time when there is a slack in private industry, and not to engage in our public construction at a time when private industry is absorbing most of the skilled workers?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from New York a question. At what point in the national income or in the number of unemployed does the Senator think we should not borrow money and spend it for public works?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think the Senator misunderstood my question. There is always a certain amount of public works we have to do. The Senator will agree with that. There is always some essential public work that we have to undertake. I say that with all this work required to be undertaken is not the more intelligent plan to undertake the public construction which we intend to undertake at a time when there is a slack in private employment?

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that there is a clear distinction between that and the spending of borrowed money for the purpose of stimulating the business activity of the country. That is what has been done in the last few years, and has resulted in the most colossal failure in American history.

Mr. WAGNER. I will not discuss that at the moment.

Mr. BYRD. We have great numbers of unemployed with us and we are increasing the public debt every day.

Mr. WAGNER. I think there will be a time to discuss that. I simply wanted to receive an answer from the Senator as to whether it is not the more intelligent plan to construct our public works at a time when there is a slack in private employment.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator from New York that I think it is beyond the intelligence of any man or group of men to determine, long in advance, when there will be public unemployment and to do this long-term planning the Senator is speaking of.

Mr. WAGNER. We are not planning unemployment long in advance. What we are proposing is to plan public construction in advance. A certain amount of public construction must be done. It is the purpose to plan it in advance so that when the economic indexes show there is unemployment we can accelerate the public-works program, and when unemployment is lessening then we can retard public construction. I do not say that we can determine the question of unemployment. What I do mean to say is that we should construct our public works at a time when private industry is not absorbing the unemployed.

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senator has a very fine theory.

Mr. WAGNER. Does not the Senator agree with that?

Mr. BYRD. My observation as a member of the Senate is that the determining factor in the construction of public works is the need of these public works and the lobby that comes to Washington to secure the appropriation for them. That is the determining factor.

Mr. President, I wish to inform the Senate of the duplication of effort in connection with the work of this Board and the work of the other departments of the Government. Now we come to the functions of this Board as set forth in the United States Government Manual.

The first function is to collect, prepare, and make available to the President such plans, data, and information as may be helpful to a planned development and use of national resources and related subjects referred to it by the President, and to recommend to the President and the Congress long-time plans and programs for the wise use and fullest development of such resources.

These are the departments that do very much the same work which the organization in question has been doing and thus duplicates a great deal of the same work. The Department of the Interior is "charged with the responsibility for advancing the domestic interests of the people of the United States," and does much of this work.

The General Land Office of the Department of the Interior, which "supervises the survey, management, and disposition of public lands and the minerals therein;" "executes all laws relating to the surveying, prospecting, locating, appropriating, entering, reconveying, and patenting all public lands within national forests, grazing districts, and other reservations;" and so forth.

The Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior, which "directs the investigation of irrigation resources, including the preparation of plans, construction, and operation of the irrigation projects, together with incidental power development."

The Geological Survey.

The Bureau of Mines.

The National Park Service.

The Bureau of Biological Survey.

The functions of the Petroleum and Conservation Division of the Department of the Interior and those of the Bituminous Coal Division of the Department of the Interior.

The National Power Policy Committee, which "plans closer cooperation of the several factors involved in electrical power supply of the United States."

The soil-conservation activity of the Department of Agriculture.

The Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture charged with "promoting the conservation and best use of the Nation's forest lands."

The Rural Electrification Administration of the Department of Agriculture.

That is the first of the functions of the Board as set forth in the United States Government Manual.

The second function is to advise the President from time to time of the trend of employment and business activity, and of the existence or approach of periods of business depression and employment in the United States or in any substantial portion thereof; and to recommend measures leading to the improvement and stabilization of economic conditions.

Here are some of the existing departments performing the same line of work:

The Division of Research and Statistics, Treasury Department, which among other duties provides "such general economic analyses as may be required by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The Department of Commerce, which has the principal purpose of "promoting and developing the foreign and domestic commerce, mining, manufacturing, shipping, and industry in general."

The Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which "addresses itself to many phases of the basic question, 'How is business of the United States, and how may it be improved?'" The Bureau's activities embrace a broad program of studies in industrial economics, surveys of general business conditions, a careful scrutiny of current trade problems, basal research into salient economic and marketing questions. It considers and analyzes such problems as the structure of industry, corporate policies, trade practices, long-term debts, real-property economics, taxation of economic enterprises, interstate-trade barriers, and significant trends in income.

The Department of Labor, which has jurisdiction over matters pertaining to fostering, promoting, and developing the welfare of American wage earners, improving their working conditions and advancing their opportunities for profitable employment.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, charged with acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with labor in the most general and comprehensive sense, and especially upon its relation to capital, hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women and the means of promoting their material prosperity and social, intellectual, and moral welfare. It is authorized to publish bulletins on the condition of labor and reports on conditions of employment and such other facts as may be deemed of value to the industrial interests of the United States.

The Bureau of Public Roads is doing some of that work.

The Public Works Administration is also doing some of it.

The Work Projects Administration is doing some of it.

The Army engineers of the War Department are doing a great deal of it. The chief of its duties in this connection is the peace-time responsibility for the construction and repair of fortifications, and so forth; and it supervises all Federal investigations and improvements for navigation, flood control, and power development of rivers and harbors.

The Tennessee Valley Authority does some of the same work.

Also the Bureau of Reclamation, with its functions involving management of irrigation projects, supervision of irrigated lands, and administration of reclamation funds.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that under authority of the act of March 3, 1933, providing for reorganization of the executive departments, the President, by Executive Order No. 6623, issued on March 31, 1934, abolished the Federal Employment Stabilization Board and ordered its records to be transferred to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, then about to be established.

I call the Senator's attention further to the fact that in the Budget for the years 1932 and 1933, the years during which the great work of the Federal Stabilization Employment Board referred to by the Senator from New York was supposed to have been performed, the total Budget authorization for this institution for that year was $90,000. Since the Senate has by amendment to this committee amendment limited the functions now to be performed by the National Resources Planning Board to the functions heretofore performed by the defunct Federal Employment Stabilization Board, it seems to leave small reason for justification of the increase from the former expenditures of this Board in its busiest time of $90,000 to the sum of $710,000, as provided in the committee amendment.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator for his comment.

Purpose 4 of the Board is to receive and record all proposed Federal projects involving the acquisition of land—including transfer-of-land jurisdiction—and land-research projects, and, in an advisory capacity, to provide the agencies concerned with such information or data as may be pertinent to the projects.

The following present Departments of the Government perform some of these functions, as set forth under the fourth purpose of the Board:

The Land Office, National Park Service, Forest Service, Public Buildings Administration, Grazing Division, Navy Department, and War Department.

The fifth purpose of this Board is to consult and cooperate with agencies of the Federal Government, with the States and municipalities or agents thereof, and with any public or private planning or research agencies or institutions in carrying out any of its duties and functions, and to act as a clearing house and means of cooperation for planning activities, linking together various levels and fields of planning.

Mr. President, the agencies of the Government which I have mentioned, which are duplicating the work which the National Resources Planning Board is doing, are executive agencies of the Federal Government, and as such are under the control of the President of the United States. If he desired to do so, he would have no difficulty in obtaining information from these agencies instead of from the National Resources Planning Board, and at greatly reduced cost.

Mr. President, I very much hope that the amendment reported by the committee will not prevail.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. REED. In my year's service in this body I have very frequently heard the term "boondoggling" used. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether or not he considers the activity under discussion the highest-priced "boondoggling" that has yet been suggested.

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator that I think it represents an unnecessary expenditure.

In conclusion, let me say that unless taxes are raised to the extent of $460,000,000 if Congress votes for the appropriations submitted to us by the President of the United States, it will be necessary to raise the $45,000,000,000 debt limit. So far as I can ascertain, no definite program has thus far been submitted by the Executive or by any Member of Congress to increase taxes to the extent of $460,000,000. If we do not increase the limit before July 1, 1941, the present debt limit of $45,000,000,000 will be exceeded unless appropriations submitted are reduced by over $400,000,000.

I think the time has come to consider this question earnestly and carefully, to economize where we can economize, and to reduce the things which will least affect the activities and the progress of the American people. I know of no agency that can be abolished with less harmful effects than the National Resources Planning Board, the agency which has been restored in the appropriation bill by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Frazier	Lucas	Schwellenbach
Andrews	George	Lundeen	Sheppard
Ashurst	Gerry	McCarran	Shipstead
Austin	Gibson	McKellar	Smathers
Bailey	Glass	McNary	Smith
Barbour	Green	Maloney	Stewart
Barkley	Guffey	Mead	Taft
Brown	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Idaho
Bulow	Hale	Minton	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Harrison	Murray	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hatch	Neely	Tobey
Byrnes	Hayden	Norris	Townsend
Capper	Herring	O'Mahoney	Truman
Chavez	Hill	Overton	Tydings
Clark, Idaho	Ho'man	Pepper	Vandenberg
Clark, Mo.	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Van Nuys
Connally	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wagner
Danaher	King	Reed	Walsh
Davis	La Follette	Reynolds	Wheeler
Donahay	Lee	Russell	White
Ellender	Lodge	Schwartz	Wiley

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to make only a short statement with reference to this item.

In the first place, there has been considerable discussion about what has been done by the National Resources Committee, and by the National Resources Planning Board since that Board succeeded the National Resources Committee.

As a matter of fact, there is some misunderstanding. There is an impression that the Resources Committee was under some obligation to report to the Congress. There was no such obligation, and it did not assume to do so unless committees of the Congress asked for such reports. Reports have been made by the Committee to the President, and then have been sent by the President to the Congress. As to the statement that the Committee has conflicted with other agencies of the Government, that statement is not accurate. The very purpose was that it should not submit reports to the Congress, and, in consequence of such reports, be charged with attempting to influence legislation by the Congress. It has been an arm of the President. It has submitted its reports to the President.

The statement has been made that it conflicted with the action of the Army engineers. I have in my hand a statement from the Chief of Engineers, dated January 23, in which he says:

This corps has always adhered steadfastly to the view that it is in no sense a policy-making branch of the Government, but solely an executive agency to carry out the functions required by law. Pursuant to this general policy there has been complete cooperation between the Corps of Engineers and the National Resources Planning Board in carrying out its purposes. This cooperation has not only extended to the Chief of Engineers and his staff in Washington, but also to the field officers of the corps.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] has referred to the activities of the National Resources Committee. As a matter of fact, the National Resources Committee has performed many useful functions. The representative of the National Resources Planning Board testified before the committee on the work of the Resources Committee in bringing together the officials of the States of Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas, as the result of which a controversy which had existed for years among those States has been satisfactorily settled, and a compact has been entered into between the States.

The object of the National Resources Committee has been to serve the President by enabling him intelligently to determine the wisdom of public-works projects. When a report was submitted by the Chief of Engineers, before the President approved it he submitted it to the National Resources Committee, solely for his information, to determine whether or not carrying out of the proposed project would affect other questions. If it would affect a power question, it was sent to the Federal Power Commission. If it would affect a reclamation project, it was sent to the Bureau of Reclamation of the Department of the Interior. This was done to enable the President to determine whether or not the suggested project should receive his approval. Having information from only one department, he might never know whether or not the project would affect other activities. Only when the Committee could obtain the facts as to the various departments could the President intelligently act upon a project.

An entirely different situation confronts the Senate this afternoon. I care not whether a Member agrees or disagrees with what has been done; the only question is, Shall this appropriation be provided for the purpose of enabling this Board to carry out the functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board?

It is said that when that Board was created in 1931 there was a small appropriation for it. That is true. The appropriation was $90,000, and it went down to about $50,000. Its history is that, pursuant to reorganization powers, the Board was abolished, but the President had no power to abolish its functions. The Congress specifically provided that he should not have power to abolish functions. Therefore the functions of that office provided by law must be performed, and now it is proposed that the National Resources Planning Board shall carry out the functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, which by Executive order were transferred to the Planning Board and which that Board now has the power to administer. The proposal here is to give it the money to do it. Whatever those functions may be, regardless of what anyone may think of what has been done, the question is, What can be done under the authority carried by this bill? We look to the law and find that the law provides—

There is hereby established a Board. * * * It shall be the duty of the Board—

To do what?—

to advise the President from time to time—

Not advise the Congress but—advise the President from time to time of the trend of employment and business activity and of the existence or approach of periods of business depression and unemployment in the United States or in any substantial portion thereof.

And it sets forth five functions:

- (1) To carry out the provisions of the Federal highway act;
- (2) The preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works;
- (3) Prosecuting flood control projects;
- (4) Carrying into effect the provisions of the Public Buildings Act;
- (5) Prosecuting such other construction as may now or hereafter be authorized by the Congress.

If this money is appropriated for that purpose, it will serve the best purpose that any similar amount of money can possibly serve when appropriated by the Congress.

Nothing has so impressed us as has the unemployment situation and methods of combatting it. The Senator from Ohio has indicated that such matters should be administered by the Public Works Administration. The pending bill does not provide money for the Public Works Administration to perform that duty. There is no estimate by the President for funds for the Public Works Administration except the amount to carry out projects under construction and for the administrative employees. There is no proposal to have a public works program submitted to the Congress. Therefore the Congress and the country are confronted with the situation that, if there is to be any planning it must be by this organization; and anyone who has devoted thought to the question surely must agree as to the wisdom of planning. If, as a result of business depression, there should happen what happened in January 1938, and the great motor companies should discharge 30,000 employees without notice other than 48 hours, and those employees should be out of employment, somewhere in this Government there should be an organization that would have a plan ready for public works that could be entered upon and entered upon immediately. What has been the trouble with the public works program heretofore? The trouble has been that when depression has come, and men have been thrown out of employment, then we start to plan and some agency comes to Washington to discuss what should be done.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is there such a Federal works plan existing today?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know.

Mr. TAFT. If a depression should occur within the next month, is there a plan now ready to be put into effect?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know.

Mr. TAFT. What has the Board been doing for the last 6 years with the money which has been provided for it, if there is not today a plan in existence?

Mr. BYRNES. I have stated that the question as to the National Resources Planning Board has been disposed of; it is now a moot question what it has done, whether it acted wisely or unwisely, because under this bill there is an appropriation for only the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, which, under the authorization of law, provides for carrying out such a program as I was discussing when interrupted.

Mr. TAFT. If this particular agency has not done the job in 6 years, let me ask whether they are going to do it in the next year? I do not agree at all with the Senator. It has not done anything in 6 years. That is the whole basis of the opposition to this agency—that it has not done anything.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. Let me first answer the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

Mr. BYRNES. I want to state to the Senator from Ohio that the National Resources Planning Board, by reason of what the Senate has done today, will have no appropriation to enable it to carry out the functions which have heretofore been performed by that Board. I have no idea that that Board today has as one of its functions such planning as I am discussing. The Federal Employment Stabilization Office, which was created by an act introduced by the Senator from New York, does provide for such planning, and I am happy that an appropriation is provided for the purpose of carrying out the functions of the act passed in 1931, introduced by the Senator from New York, which directs the planning which I have discussed. I do not believe any such planning was a part of the functions of the National Resources Board. If it was, I never so understood, and I am not discussing what has been done by the National Resources Board. Now I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am a member of the committee of which the Senator is the strategist, and I recognize him as the great strategist of this body; but I am wondering if the Board which was created by an act of Congress in 1931 has accomplished anything in the way of planning for either a 6-year period or a 5-year period or any other period to which the able Senator from South Carolina can now point.

Mr. BYRNES. If they have, I never heard of it.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is what I thought.

Mr. BYRNES. It was established in 1931 with an appropriation of $90,000, and if it ever carried out these functions I have not heard of it. But I come back to my statement. For the first time I see some hope that, as a result of what has now occurred, the Employment Stabilization Office will be given funds which will enable it to do something far better than anything that the National Resources Committee has ever done. The Senator from Missouri and I were members of the Employment Committee, and last year one of the things in which I was particularly interested was to try to secure an appropriation that would enable the Board to plan in advance for public works, so that when depressions came the Federal Government could immediately—to take the illustration to which I referred a few moments ago—go into that section where the automobile industry is principally located, and if there was wholesale unemployment there, put people to work by immediately starting the construction of Government projects. I am not defending any agency and do not care about doing it, but I say the trouble has been when we have appropriated money for public works it has taken us so long to move into the large jobs, the large projects which really employ people, that oftentimes the real crisis has passed before money has been spent and put into the pockets of the workingmen. The only way it has been done is when the W. P. A. has come in. My belief has always been that we ought to have available project plans, insofar as they can be perfected in cooperation with a board such as the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, and when it appears that there is to be serious unemployment on the western coast, to put into effect immediate plans for projects there to relieve that situation, and if there is an unemployment condition in New England, to put such a plan into effect there.

As to what the Planning Board has done, I confess I do not know. I know that if it had any such plans, I have not heard of them. I am sure I would have heard of them.

Mr. McCARRAN. Did the able Senator from South Carolina ever have brought to his attention any occasion when the National Planning Board conformed its plans to those of any one of the 43 State planning boards that are in existence?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know that it conformed. I only know the testimony before the committee of the representatives of the Board, speaking again now of what the National Resources Committee did.

Mr. McCARRAN. If I may interrupt again, I will say that so far as I have been able to ascertain—and I regret that I was not in the committee meeting when this matter was before the committee—I have yet to learn of one occasion when the National Planning Board, which we are now trying to perpetuate under a different name, agreed with or acted in conformity with any one of the 43 State planning boards now in existence.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no information about the Board except the testimony before the committee.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Not until I answer the Senator from Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina declines to yield for the present.

Mr. BYRNES. The testimony before the committee, which appears on page 7, sets forth a number of projects in which the Board claims that it did cooperate with State boards. As I say, I have no knowledge other than this. For instance, one item to which they rather called attention, and of which I have some recollection, is the following:

In 1935, after more than 40 years of controversy over the waters in the basin, the three States joined in requesting the National Resources Committee to sponsor a comprehensive study of all relevant data. A cooperative investigation was organized promptly. Arrangements were made for the Bureau of Reclamation to study dam sites and possible transmountain diversions, for the Geological Survey to make measurements of stream flow and ground water, and for the Bureau of Agricultural Engineering to determine water uses and requirements. The Office of Indian Affairs, the Soil Conservation Service, the Bureau of Plant Industry, and the Resettlement Administration donated important technical help. Necessary funds were provided by the Public Works Administration, the participating Federal agencies, and the States. Thus, many agencies which formerly had worked independently pooled their resources in a common undertaking.

The result, as presented in the report of the Rio Grande joint investigation, was the first truly comprehensive picture of the water resources and uses in any large interstate drainage basin in the United States. * * *

It resulted in a compact * * * which was approved without any dissenting vote by all three legislatures and by both Houses of the Congress.

And they instance here one other item of New Mexico and Texas as having a similar investigation in the Pecos Basin, which is being made, and state that there were other items. That is their testimony on the subject.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may say to the Senator that some of us have knowledge of the plans which were worked out; but, as stated in the reports, they were worked out by the legislatures of the respective States and by the representatives of the respective States, and not by the Planning Board, although the Planning Board may take credit for them.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no intimate knowledge on the subject, except that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] stated to me a while ago that in the matter which has just been referred to, the Board did, in his opinion, perform a very useful service to the State. I have no information about the matter; but I submit to the Senate that regardless of what the committee has done, the functions committed to the Federal Employment Stabilization Office really provide an exceedingly important service, and that the Congress can render a fine service by giving to the organization an appropriation—that is all that is proposed here—for the purpose of administering those functions. A million dollars was requested for the Planning Board by the Budget Bureau. The Appropriations Committee reduced that amount to $710,000, which is to cover the administration of the functions of the Board.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator how the committee justifies this particular figure of $710,000, inasmuch as the estimates are based on the functions heretofore performed by the National Resources Planning Board, including a number of functions outlined by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] a moment ago in reading the divisions and the organization of that body, which by the action of the Senate today have been excluded from the operation of this appropriation, which we are now limiting. The application of this appropriation, as the amendment stands at the present time, is limited to the functions heretofore performed by the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, which at the heyday of its activities in the year of its greatest service and greatest activity, as explained by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] a while ago, spent only $90,000. So, having a set of figures here based on one set of activities which have now been removed from the National Resources Planning Board, it seems to me to be extremely unwise to apply the same yardstick to the performance of an entirely different set of functions belonging to a different organization, which have recently been transferred to the Board.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error in his statement that money would be available only for such functions of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board as have heretofore been authorized by law. I have read those functions. Admittedly the functions as set forth in the act are as broad as, or broader than, those of the National Resources Committee. For instance, I call attention to them again:

- (a) For carrying out the provisions of the Federal Highway Act * * *;
- (b) For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore and hereafter authorized as may be most desirable in the interest of commerce and navigation;
- (c) For prosecuting flood-control projects heretofore or hereafter authorized; and
- (d) For carrying into effect the provisions of the Public Buildings Act, approved May 25, 1926 * * *; and
- (e) For prosecuting such other construction as may now or hereafter be authorized by the Congress, and which is or may be included in the 6-year advance plans as hereinafter provided.

Those are functions similar to the functions that were administered by the old National Resources Committee; but, in addition, the function of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board and the part of the act to which I have called attention, which is of more interest to me, is the advance planning to which I called attention, and which could be made, if the money is spent right and spent wisely, the means of promoting efficiency in public works and with the hope of saving some money, of seeing that it is spent intelligently and only for wise projects.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] confirms the statement which was made by a number of Senators during the debate in respect to this amendment. That is, that, so far as he knows and so far as any other Senator knows, so far as the progress of the debate indicates, neither the National Resources Planning Board nor its predecessor, the National Resources Committee, nor the predecessor of both, the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, has ever done any work that has commended itself either to Congress or to the Nation.

It has been suggested by the Senator from South Carolina that sufficient statutory authority is vested in the National Resources Planning Board, by reason of the fact that all the functions of the old Federal Employment Stabilization Board have been transferred to the new board, to give it an opportunity to do something really worth while.

Conceding that to be true for the sake of argument, yet the highest sum that was appropriated for the old Stabilization Board was $90,000. With $90,000 at first and later with $50,000, it did nothing. The National Resources Committee had allotted to it a much larger sum than $90,000 or $50,000; and, according to my recollection, under the Executive order creating the committee, it had more extensive authority than that possessed by the Stabilization Board.

Therefore, if the contention made by the Senator from South Carolina be correct that we ought to allow this newly created Board, the National Resources Planning Board, to make a fresh start, why not give it an opportunity first to justify itself? Instead of appropriating almost $1,000,000 to start it off on a career that may end as disastrously as the career of its predecessors ended, why not give it an opportunity to justify itself by making a reasonable appropriation? Let us see what it can do if it be equipped with the sum that was appropriated for the old Stabilization Board.

Therefore, Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 4, line 20, I move to strike out the figures "$710,000" and substitute "$100,000"; and on line 21, page 4, I move to strike out "$40,000" and substitute "$5,000", so that the appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board then would be $100,000, of which not to exceed $5,000 would be available for printing and binding.

I offer that amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if we vote for the Senator's amendment, as I shall, that would not imply a moral obligation on our part to vote against the bill?

Mr. OVERTON. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 20, it is proposed to strike out of the amendment of the committee "$710,000" and to insert "$100,000", and on line 21 to strike out "$40,000" and to insert "$5,000."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay a vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana, but I wish to say just a few words with reference to it and regarding the amendment offered by the committee.

I favor the amendment offered by the committee to appropriate $710,000 for the National Resources Planning Board. I realize that there is somewhat of a deep-seated disagreement among perfectly honest and sincere Members of the Senate and of the community over the question of national planning and as to the agency which should carry it on if it is to be carried on.

The United States is an enormous country. There are 48 States in the Union. Our resources are diversified, extending from one end of the country to the other. It may be that we should not look upon these problems as a whole; it may be that there should not be in the mind of anyone the conception that in developing our resources, in conserving them, and in making them useful to our people, we should do it as a nation. But, fortunately or unfortunately, while I am as filled as any man can be with local pride and believe that the functions of a State in not only its political but its industrial attitude toward the welfare of the people should be preserved, I believe that as a great nation of 130,000,000 we have to look at these problems very largely as a nation and as a whole. Therefore I do not share the opinion of those who are opposed to any national outlook with respect to these matters. I am one of those who believe that we cannot divide ourselves into 48 airtight and watertight compartments in dealing with problems which are national, and which we must face as a nation, as a whole people, rather than as segments of the people.

I do not wish to go into the work of this National Resources Planning Board or its predecessor, the National Resources Committee, or the work of the Federal Employment Stabilization Board, all of whose functions have been converged under the Executive order of the President; but I do believe it is worth $710,000 each year to have some board or some agency under the direction of the President, and responsible to him, from whom he may seek advice, and whom he may instruct to investigate matters which come peculiarly within his jurisdiction, that will take a national viewpoint of matters within its jurisdiction and its province.

There should not be any jealousy or controversy between the National Resources Planning Board and the Corps of Army Engineers. I have always been a defender of the Corps of Army Engineers, and I am now. I think they constitute probably as expert a body of men as there are employed by the Government of the United States. There is no real controversy between these two bodies. They have up to now worked together; they have coordinated their functions and their activities; they have advised with one another, and there has been no real cause for any controversy between the National Resources Planning Board and the Corps of Army Engineers with respect to the development of our national resources. There may be less cause for friction in the future, although from a reading of the statute under which the Federal Employment Stabilization Board was created, in the matter of considering employment, which is a subject which has many ramifications, they can go into all the matters with respect to the improvement of our rivers and harbors, matters of reforestation, of recreation, flood control, stream pollution, and the various matters which are under the jurisdiction of the Planning Board itself, in all probability, because it seems that the jurisdiction somewhat overlaps with respect to these two Boards.

I earnestly hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana will not be agreed to. If this Board is worth anything, it is worth more than $100,000. If it is not worth any more than that, it should not have any money at all. I believe that it is worth more than that. I believe that it will perform a useful duty to the people of the United States. I think that the pending amendment should be defeated and that the amendment offered by the committee should be agreed to, and I hope it will be, because I think that somewhere in the Government of the United States there should be an agency looking at our problems as a whole, and that they should not be considered by separate groups of individuals in localities, people probably interested more in some local enterprise or development than in the coordination of all our activities in behalf of all the people, with a coordinated, well-thought-out, symmetrical, and systematic plan for the utilization of the resources with which God Almighty has endowed the United States of America.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on page 25 of the House hearings is set out a division of the expenses of the National Resources Planning Board, and while it is somewhat difficult to analyze it carefully, it seems to me that $100,000, as proposed by the Senator from Louisiana, would cover all of the items which deal with the question of unemployment, which is the only function left for the Board after the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. So, regardless of what we may think of the Board, it certainly seems that $710,000 is much beyond anything which ought to be appropriated for the functions which now remain to it. So I believe the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana should be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Is the motion to reduce to $100,000 the appropriation provided in the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the question.

Mr. McNARY. Senators who favor decreasing the appropriation should vote "yea"?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. Not knowing how that Senator would vote, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I announce that my colleague, Mr. WILEY, is detained on official business of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. I announce that my colleague, Mr. BANKHEAD, is absent on account of illness.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. Since he is not present in the Chamber, I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and let my vote stand.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is necessarily absent. He has a pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO]. If the Senator from Vermont were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "yea." I am advised that the Senator from Mississippi would vote "nay."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that my colleague, Mr. SLATTERY, is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BARKLEY. I announce that my colleague, Mr. CHANDLER, is absent because of illness. I am not authorized to say how he would vote if present.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent, attending the funeral of the late Representative Dowell, of Iowa.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in important committee meetings.

I announce the following general pairs: The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—34

Bailey	Frazier	King	Thomas, Idaho
Barbour	George	Lodge	Tobey

So Mr. OVERTON's amendment to the committee amendment, as amended, was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 4, line 8, as amended.

Mr. BYRD. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senate now voting upon the committee amendment, as amended on motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. And a vote against the appropriation is "nay?"

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. And a vote for the appropriation is "yea?"

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's statement is correct. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. CHANDLER's name was called). I wish to repeat the announcement I made on the previous roll call, that my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is absent from the Senate because of illness. I am not authorized to say how he would vote on this question if present.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. LUCAS (when Mr. SLATTERY's name was called). My colleague is unavoidably detained. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). Adhering to my previous statement, I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). Repeating the statement made by me on the previous vote, I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and let my vote stand.

Mr. TYDINGS. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is necessarily detained on Government business.

Mr. McNARY. Repeating a previous statement, I announce that the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], if present, would vote "nay." I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] would vote "yea."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent, attending the funeral of the late Representative Dowell, of Iowa.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—38

Adams	Guffey	Maloney	Schwellenbach
Andrews	Hatch	Mead	Sheppard

So the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to. Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion of the Senator from Kentucky is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 22, to increase the total appropriation for the Executive Office of the President from $1,334,850 to $2,044,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Civil Aeronautics Authority," on page 8, line 6, after the word "automobiles", to strike out "$1,659,191" and insert "$1,543,932"; so as to read:

General administration: For all necessary expenses of the offices of the members of the Authority, Coordinator and Secretary, General Counsel, Director of Statistics and Information, and Director of Regional Offices, in carrying out the provisions of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 (52 Stat. 973), including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; expenses of the Air Safety Board other than those specifically provided for under "Air Safety Board, Civil Aeronautics Authority"; contract stenographic reporting services; fees and mileage of witnesses; expenses of examination of estimates of appropriations in the field; purchase (including exchange), operation, maintenance, and repair of aircraft; hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles; $1,543,932.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, earlier in the day I expressed a desire to be heard on the amendment with reference to the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The committee amendment affects five captions in the bill. I shall address myself to all five at once, if the able Senator in charge of the bill will agree to discuss them in that way. I think it might save time, and make the matter a little more comprehensive.

The five headings to which I wish to address myself are: "General administration," "Economic regulation," "Maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities," "Safety regulation," and "Establishment of air-navigation facilities." The reason why I desire to address myself to all five at once is that they are comprehensive and coordinated. I am wondering whether or not the able chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would care to discuss them as one proposition, or whether he would prefer to take them up one by one.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia does not care to discuss them at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. Then I shall address myself to all five matters, under the headings, "General administration"; "Economic regulation"; "Maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities"; "Safety regulation"; and "Establishment of air-navigation facilities."

A little understanding as to the program of civil aeronautics, and a little reminder of what has transpired, will not be out of place. It will be recalled that a much beloved, now revered, Member of this body lost his life as he traveled from New Mexico to take his seat in the Senate. Following the death of Bronson Cutting, an investigation was conducted under the direction of the then chairman of the Commerce Committee, the much beloved late Senator from New York, Senator Copeland. At the conclusion of that hearing the committee, of which Senator Copeland was chairman, rendered a most comprehensive report, which recommended to Congress that some $16,000,000 be expended in a program to provide safety facilities for travel by air.

That program finally found itself embodied in the act of which I had the privilege to be the author, namely, the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. That act, now a little less than 2 years old, has accomplished more in the way of development of air commerce and safety in the air than any other measure that has been enacted for commerce in this century.

I say that on the authority of the President of the United States, who not long ago issued a public statement in which he said that the certificated air lines of the country had rendered a wonderful service, and that they had accomplished 500,000,000 passenger-miles without a single fatality.

In other words, by the expenditure of public moneys we accomplished a safety measure and made it possible for 500,000,000 passenger-miles to be flown within this country without a single fatality.

Mr. President, that result was not accomplished by haphazard methods. It was accomplished because the object, purposes, and mandates of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 were meticulously carried out.

I wish here and now, as I have done in the past on other occasions, to pay my respects to the Civil Aeronautics Authority appointed by the President pursuant to the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938. I think that Authority has accomplished a wonderful work. Without ostentation, without publicity, without anything that brought itself to public note, it has accomplished a great and magnificent result. Instead of the people being afraid to travel by air, today our planes, flying from the west coast to the east coast, and from the Gulf to the Canadian line, are utilized daily, so that one must have reservations days ahead in order to obtain a seat on one of the planes.

Moreover, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, by the use of public money and the facilities accorded to it by the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, put into effect conditions which have brought together the communities of this Nation from north to south and from east to west.

More than that, the Civil Aeronautics Authority has, by the use of public money and by the facilities afforded it through the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, brought about a condition whereby this Nation is today fortified from within. Today every plane that travels from the Pacific to the Atlantic, every plane that travels from the Gulf to the Canadian line—yea, more, every pilot who flies on any route—constitutes, together with air facilities, an essential agency for defense in time of national distress when we may be threatened from without. In other words, every pilot today who flies the air is a potential warrior, trained with a knowledge of the terrain, with a knowledge of air currents, with a knowledge of other conditions. All these things have been accomplished by and with the sanction—yea, more, at the command and direction of acts of Congress.

We appropriated $7,000,000 for 1940. In connection with that appropriation we directed that facilities for the protection and safety in travel by air should be provided in this country. We have not accomplished everything we set about to do, but we have set up air protection and air facilities whereby life is safeguarded in travel by air. We have set up those facilities under the direction of Congress. The question now is the manning of those facilities. So one of the greatest items in this particular phase of the bill is that of additional personnel. Mr. Hester, when he came before the committee, reported that it would require some 630 additional personnel. Those constituting that personnel were not to be in the office in Washington; they were not to be swivel-chair employees; they were to man the facilities for air travel throughout the length and breadth of this country. They were to live in the deserts if need be. Somewhere there may be a facility requiring 1 man, and at other places there may be a facility requiring as many as 15 men; but in every instance those men are to see to it that as planes pass over, as travel is conducted through the air, the pilots are warned from moment to moment as to flying conditions. More than that, the pilots are advised from moment to moment as they travel in any particular channel and a particular course.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator what, if any value, the new facilities constructed as a result of the appropriations for last year would have if we did not provide personnel to man them? Would they be of any value whatsoever?

Mr. McCARRAN. Let me say to the Senator that not only would they be valueless but, as a matter of economy, they would have to be taken from their present locations and stored somewhere, so that the elements or other factors might not entirely destroy them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President—

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The net result of the $1,000,000 reduction, which is an arbitrary reduction made by the Senate Appropriations Committee, would be that 3,000 miles of air-safety facilities now constructed and ready to be operated would have to be taken out of operation?

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to emphasize what is in the Senator's question. In other words, the facilities have by mandate of Congress been set up, and, having been set up, they must now be manned in order to be of any use whatsoever. So additional personnel for the operation of these facilities is entirely essential.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President—

Mr. McCARRAN. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. We have been looking to long-distance flying in this country. Today no facility in America means more for this country and its development than the methods of travel by which people may go rapidly from one section to another; there is no facility more important than that which transports mail from one section to another; there is no facility more important today than that new facility by which it is proposed to put our Nation ahead of all the other nations of the earth, namely, the facility of travel and commerce by air.

I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator. I noticed the Senator said he would speak on each of the subheads in general. I note among the subheads is one for "Maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities," on page 8.

"Technical development," page 9.

"Safety regulation," page 9.

"Establishment of air-navigation facilities," on page 10.

I wish the Senator would please tell us why it is that under every one of such heads we find particularly reference made in each instance for the purchase of the following items for aviation purposes, "including snow shoes and skis."

Mr. McCARRAN. If the Senator were familiar with the mountainous country over which air travel must pass, if he knew that men must go to the very summits of the Rockies and the summits of other mountain ranges, he would know that they must be equipped with those things that will afford them the means by which they will be able to reach the places where their services may be required. I sought to deal with the matter a moment ago, when I said that the additional personnel is not personnel to be located in Washington but the men are to be out on the desert and in the mountain ranges, for in some places air-travel facilities are located in almost inaccessible places.

Mr. DANAHER. I wish to thank the Senator for his help. Perhaps it is due to my unfamiliarity with budget making, but why should we have to have an allotment for snow shoes and skis under each of those heads? Why could we not appropriate for snow shoes and skis once and have done with it, so to speak?

Mr. McCARRAN. I may enlighten the Senator by saying we always have to deal with the Comptroller General, and the Comptroller General is meticulous in asking for detail as to every item under every heading. That may, to some extent, explain the reason for going into detail in these matters.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. With reference to the question asked by the Senator from Connecticut, I should like to say, as a member of the Copeland committee which investigated the question of safety in the air—an investigation which came about as a result of the death of the late Senator from New Mexico, Mr. Cutting—that it was the testimony of the heads of the Weather Bureau, the testimony of the heads of all the aeronautical scientific societies, and the testimony of the air operators, that nothing could possibly be devised to contribute more to safety in the air than the improvement of the weather service in the way of scouts at remote areas who might be able, by some means, at definite places, to telephone in reports of a storm which might not have been detected by the predictions of the Weather Bureau.

The reason for the inclusion in this measure of those particular authorizations is simply to keep some clerk in the Comptroller General's office who does not understand the situation from holding up a vital appropriation until the heads of the Weather Bureau and the Civil Aeronautics Authority can have a chance to go down and have a hearing and explain to him the very vital necessity for those items.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield while I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Missouri was on the committee which investigated the accident that killed Senator Cutting. Is it not a fact that it was the failure of some of the air facilities which was responsible for that accident?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator from Indiana that there was never any complete agreement as to the exact cause of that accident; but undoubtedly the failure of the facilities at the station in the vicinity of La Plata, Mo., was a very great contributing cause of the accident. The testimony was that when the ship in which Senator Cutting was a passenger arrived over Kansas City the operators at Kansas City were not advised as to what the weather conditions were in the vicinity of La Plata, Mo.; and, according to the weight of the testimony, they apparently ordered the ship on the line where Senator Cutting was finally killed, instead of ordering it to turn around and go to Omaha, where the field was clear.

Mr. MINTON. Is it clear to the Senator from Missouri that if we do not provide this money for these employees and for the additional facilities we may be caught again in a situation very similar to that which resulted in the death of Senator Cutting?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I was about to say—I do not wish to infringe on the time of the Senator from Nevada—that I very much hope we will take steps to continue the magnificent work which has been done for safety in the air and that it never again will be necessary to wait until a Member of this body is killed in order to have the Government of the United States take proper steps in the matter of insuring safety in the air.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to expand just a little the reply made by the able Senator from Missouri to the able Senator from Indiana as to whether or not facilities may have been neglected. The records show that an order was made, in order to carry out a certain phase of economy, that a certain light should be reduced in its intensity. The light, therefore, became entirely inoperative. It was a beacon light of great importance, and had it been operating to its proper intensity it would have given the pilot on that occasion guidance by which, in all probability, the lives of the passengers, including the life of Senator Cutting, would have been saved.

Let me draw attention to the fact that there have been set up, pursuant to the mandate of Congress, facilities which I will name in just a moment, and which, if we do not pass this appropriation as it came from the House—which was in itself a reduction—will be entirely abandoned for the time being, or must be removed and put in storage.

I refer to the following lines:

Between San Antonio and Houston, 195 miles.

Between New Orleans and Jacksonville, 515 miles.

Between Memphis and Tampa, 720 miles.

Between Las Vegas, Nev., and Fresno, Calif., 252 miles.

Between Tampa and Miami, Fla., 220 miles.

Between Cincinnati and Columbus, 103 miles.

Between Springfield and Chicago, 175 miles.

Between Grand Island, Denver, and Laramie, 476 miles.

Between Newark and Buffalo, 280 miles.

Between Los Angeles and Phoenix, 373 miles.

All of those lines where facilities have now been set up under appropriation and direction made by Congress—made by this body, together with the House—must be either allowed to rust in the elements, unattended, unmanned, or, as they should be, collected and put into storage, thus entailing a greater expense, because, Mr. President, we are not going to abandon aviation. The program set up by this body and by Congress will without question be carried forward, because this country is not going backward.

It has been said with entire propriety for centuries past that "Britannia rules the waves." I hope the day will come, and I think the day is here, when we can boastfully say, "Columbia rules the air"; and we propose to carry forward that slogan internally and externally.

Let it be remembered that we are not alone battling here to continue the program that develops our country internally. Today American flagships traveling through the air ply from San Francisco to the Orient. American flagships traveling through the air ply from San Francisco to Australia. American flagships traveling through the air prior to the war plied from New York to London. So we are in contact by air with the world at large. Today we have planes of our flag going through the air from New York to South America, across the Andes, and coming up on the Atlantic coast. We are developing our commerce by air. We cannot afford to be parsimonious when it comes to a question of safety in travel and safety of property in the expansion of our air commerce.

Mr. President, the amounts allowed by the House were in themselves a cut from those allowed by the Budget Bureau. The Budget Bureau allowed much more than the House allowed. The House itself cut down on the Budget allowance; and then, when the bill came here, the Senate committee again cut the amount to such a point that, if it goes through as the committee brought in its amendments, we must not only lose from a standpoint of development in commerce by air, but we must lose because if we allow these facilities that have been provided to stand out unmanned, they will become subject to destruction.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will see fit not to adopt the committee amendments. I regret that I was not able to be with the committee at the time they were considering these amendments. I do not know that my presence there would have affected the action taken; but I do hope that my presence here will affect the matter so that we will not regret, as we did regret after the death of Senator Cutting, as expressed by the report of the Copeland committee, that we had not put more money into protection of travel by air.

Mr. President, in connection with my remarks on this subject I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article published in the New York Sun of February 3, 1940, entitled "Across the Skyways," by Sherman B. Altick. He deals with the subject of safety in the air and air transportation generally.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Sun of February 3, 1940]

ACROSS THE SKYWAYS—FEAR FELT FOR SAFETY OF AIR TRAVEL AS $1,013,480 IS TRIMMED FROM C. A. A.'S AIRWAY BUDGET

(By Sherman B. Altick)

Air transportation in the United States is the safest in the world, but it is feared in aviation circles that this condition may not prevail a year from today unless the $1,013,480 trimmed from the Civil Aeronautics Authority's budget is restored for the proper maintenance of the Federal airways.

The House and the Senate seemingly are not in accord on the value of air safety, for the Appropriations Committee of the Senate yesterday lopped off funds which the former had approved as essential for the maintenance of the airways. The House trimmed the budget in the original, but there were no slashes which might impair the safety of air transportation.

Aviation officials have no argument against economy in spending of the taxpayers' money. In fact they believe there are places where the appropriations could be trimmed and some activities curtailed, but they are against any action which might reduce America's high safety figure for air transportation. The air lines have not had a fatal accident in almost a year and they want to maintain that record, if possible.

AIRWAYS PERSONNEL NEEDED

The Senate committee trimmed $1,678,739 from the C. A. A. budget but only $165,259 of that sum was for other activities besides the maintenance of the airways and the safety regulations. The lump sum of $1,000,000 was for maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities which R. H. Hinckley, Chairman of the C. A. A., told the House Appropriations Committee was for airports and their lighting; radio and communications facilities along the airways, including teletype networks; maintenance of facilities already installed along the Federal airways, and for the operation of the new Washington Airport during the fiscal year. Thirteen thousand four hundred and eighty dollars was cut from the Safety Regulations Division.

When he appeared he pointed out that "increased appropriations (of the C. A. A.) are due almost entirely to an increase in the number of facilities and essential needs for augmenting operating personnel complement of certain stations to provide for two-man simultaneous watches during the busiest part of the day. This need arises from increased volume of traffic, which, at these stations, has grown to such proportions that it cannot be handled by a one-man watch."

Mr. Hinckley is as much disturbed by the pruning of the airways funds as officials of the air lines, and will fight to have the deleted budget restored so the safety of air travel will not be impaired. When he presented his budget, he stated maintenance costs were figured close to a minimum without impairing the reliability of navigational aids.

If he can keep the air lines going on schedule another year without a fatal accident, it will be a feather in his cap, and one well merited. That is what he is striving to do, and the air lines are doing everything asked of them to maintain the high factor of safety that prevails today.

GREATER RESPONSIBILITIES

No one in the aviation industry wants to see air safety impaired. They would much rather see the pilot-training program reduced, or have some other activity of the Government curtailed to some extent, but they want to see the C. A. A. with sufficient funds for efficient operation of the airways. Even if it means the loss of an auxiliary airport, or a dozen of them, or perhaps the extension of an airway or two, members of the flying fraternity, and air travelers as well, do not want safety sacrificed.

The fiscal year, which begins on July 1, will see larger-winged liners in operation. Before the dawn of 1941, the area of four-motored air travel along the domestic skyways will be ushered in, and with these larger planes will come increased responsibilities for everyone associated with the industry. Instead of 21 passengers, there will be 40 in the planes, and there must be no mishaps.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to add just a word in support of the argument which has just been made by the distinguished junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN].

It has, I think, been pointed out that during the past 10 months there has not been a single fatality upon the aviation lines of America. The unwisdom of failing, by any act on our part, to maintain this record for safety is, of course, apparent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator; but I merely desire to call his attention to the fact that, as a mere matter of dollars and cents, the proposed reduction is "penny-wise and pound-foolish," because the very remarkable record which has been established of not having a single life lost or a single person injured on the air lines of the United States since the 26th of March last has already almost doubled aviation travel in the United States, particularly in the winter months; and if that continues it will mean an increase in the general passenger business of the United States and the general freight business of the United States which, in turn, will inevitably permit a reduction in air-mail rates, which, as a mere matter of dollars and cents, will save the Government of the United States a great deal of money.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the Senator is quite correct, and I am very glad he has called attention to that phase of the problem.

There is another aspect which I think deserves additional emphasis. What this country needs and what the world needs more than anything else is the development of new industries, and the cooperation of government with business in the development of new industries. Here we have an outstanding record of the successful development of free private enterprise in aviation. Completely disregarding the spurt in aviation manufacturing, which may be due to conditions in Europe, it is well known that the aviation companies of the United States which are devoted to the development of commercial aviation established during the year 1939 a record without comparison. During that year almost every aviation company in the United States operated at a profit. There were, I understand, two small companies which were still in the red. The significance of this profitable operation of aviation companies in transporting passengers and freight—the development of a new commercial industry—is, to my mind, so great that it seems to me it impels everybody to grant complete cooperation to the agency which has been helping to bring about this result.

If we risk the interruption of the development of air commerce, the development of safety, we risk the development of the profitable operation upon these lines. The successful cooperation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority with the private companies is an illustration of cooperation between Government and business which ought to impel us to follow the same line of development with respect to other industries.

Mr. President, it seems to me that there is no real argument against the position taken by the Senator from Nevada, and I sincerely hope, as he does, that the committee amendments with respect to the Civil Aeronautics Authority will not prevail.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire merely to add a word or two to what has been said by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], particularly with regard to the item for the maintenance and operation of the air facilities of the country.

I call attention to the fact that a record has been established in the last year more than five times as impressive as the record ever established before in any year in this country. In the whole calendar year 1939 there were only two accidents on the air lines involving fatalities, and since the 26th of March last, a period of nearly ten and a half months, there has not been a single accident in the United States involving a fatality. Not a passenger, not a pilot, not a member of the crew of air transport aircraft operating within the United States, has suffered death or serious accident by aerial misadventure during that period.

Since the last serious accident occurred on the air lines American aircraft have flown 76,000,000 miles in regular transport operation, they have carried 1,800,000 passengers, and they have recorded a total of approximately 720,000,000 passenger miles of aircraft handling.

Mr. President, I do not think it can be controverted that air transportation is the transportation of the future, and that it is a vital national necessity for the United States not only to keep abreast but to keep ahead of the rest of the world in the development of civil aeronautics, as a matter of reserve power for the Nation both in time of war, and of commercial power in time of peace.

Necessarily the thing which has impeded the development of passenger traffic on civil aeronautical lines in this country has been apprehension as to safety. People who would gladly have flown from place to place in this country, as a matter of comfort or as a matter of saving time were unwilling to fly because of the danger involved. Therefore, the element of safety is the basis of the successful operation of the civil aircraft of this country.

The development of the element of safety is reflected in every phase of the industry. It is reflected in the number of lines which may be established. It is reflected in the factory employment for the manufacture of the planes necessary in the industry. It is reflected in the vast number of men employed as ground crews in the industry. It is reflected in the increased volume of transportation in the country as a whole. It is reflected in the general speeding up and development of our national transportation facilities.

In the past I have been critical at times of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I stood upon this floor a year ago and called attention to the very large personnel which they were employing in comparison with some of the other bureaus of our Government. I felt that the Civil Aeronautics Authority had been derelict in its duty in taking over as a whole the old Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce, one of the most inefficient bureaus of the Government, and retaining that personnel. But I desire to say that, however just that criticism may have been a year ago—and I believe it was just—the record made in the matter of safety in the year 1939, and the promise for the future in the matter of safety cannot be safely disregarded.

I am very reluctant to vote against any measure of economy proposed by the Committee on Appropriations or by the House of Representatives or by anybody else; but, as I stated a moment ago, it seems to me that arbitrarily to cut a million dollars off the appropriation for the maintenance and operation of safety facilities on the air lines of the United States is penny wise and pound foolish. I say it is foolish, as I stated awhile ago, as a mere matter of dollars and cents, because the tremendous increase in the volume of air travel is evidenced by the fact that the air travel in the United States in December of last year—1939—was 74 percent in excess of the air travel in December 1938. That tremendous increase in volume will make inevitable the possibility of a reduction in air postage rates, which will tremendously increase that facility to the American people, and at the same time save a great deal of money to the Government.

I desire to make one other point in connection with this item. The item of operation of these facilities necessarily takes effect principally in the year following the construction of the facilities. In other words, the facilities constructed in the year 1939, so far as the item of operation is concerned, took effect only for a portion of that year, but will be more fully reflected provided the facilities are fully operated in the following year. Necessarily, therefore, in view of the very large construction in 1939, in view of the construction already completed, the item of operation must necessarily increase, and it seems to me that there is no justification for the arbitrary reduction of this very necessary facility.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a brief schedule showing the estimates of the various items of the Civil Aeronautics Authority submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, the items approved by the Bureau of the Budget, those approved by the House of Representatives, and those approved by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

I also ask to have printed at this point as part of my remarks a memorandum illustrating by specific instances the construction for this year and operating costs of next year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

Comparison of fiscal year 1941 Civil Aeronautics Authority budget

Appropriation title	Estimates submitted to Bureau of Budget	Approved by Bureau of Budget	Approved by House of Representatives	Approved by Senate Appropriations Committee
General administration.....	$2,063,766	$1,680,121	$1,659,191	$1,543,932
Safety regulation.....	3,115,970	2,420,000	2,420,000	2,406,520
Economic regulation.....	677,648	519,222	519,222	469,222
Civilian pilot training.....	7,000,000	6,000,000	5,000,000	5,000,000
Construction of aids to navigation facilities:
Establishment of aids to navigation facilities.....	8,141,520	5,265,280	5,265,280	5,265,280
Maintenance and operation aids to navigation facilities.....	14,067,241	12,000,000	12,000,000	11,000,000
Technical development.....	1,259,380	557,000	557,000	557,000
Air Safety Board.....	784,956	380,000	380,000	380,000
Printing and binding.....	110,000	100,000	100,000	100,000
Total.....	37,210,481	28,921,623	27,900,693	26,721,954

Separate appropriations are made for:

(a) Establishment of air-navigation facilities (involving construction, installation of signaling equipment, relocation of sites, and modernization of buildings and equipment); and

(b) Maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities (involving structural and mechanical inspection, adjustment, and repair, as well as personal services, electric power, telephone line rentals, and other expenses involved in daily operation).

The major effect of construction work in a given fiscal year on the amount of funds required for maintenance and operation takes place in the fiscal year following the construction work.

While various items of the construction program are completed and placed in operation during the fiscal year in which they are constructed, the cost of such operation and attendant maintenance is only that for the remaining portion of the fiscal year and, if the date of completion is near the close of the fiscal year, such operation and maintenance may not be at full scale.

But for the succeeding fiscal year, funds for a full year's normal operation are required, which are bound to be in excess of those needed for the short period of operation in the year of construction. Thus, the $7,000,000 construction program of fiscal year 1940 brings about an important increase in the appropriation for maintenance and operation in fiscal year 1941—and that without regard to the amount of funds which may be made available for construction in 1941.

A few typical cases will illustrate this point.

(1) At Millinocket, Maine, a radio range and communications station went into operation January 27, 1940. For fiscal year 1940 funds are required for 5 months' operation, $4,980. For fiscal year 1941 funds are required for 12 months' operation, $11,949, or an increase of $6,969.

(2) At Dothan, Ala., a similar station will go into operation April 1, 1940. For fiscal year 1940 funds are required for 3 months' operation, $3,055. For fiscal year 1941 funds are required for 12 months' operation, $11,949, or an increase of $8,894.

(3) Glens Falls, N. Y., a teletype communications station will go into operation June 1, 1940. For fiscal year 1940 funds are required for 1 month's operation, $580. For fiscal year 1941 funds are required for 12 months' operation, $6,640, or an increase of $6,060.

(4) At Cleveland, Ohio, an ultra high-frequency radio range will be completed early in July 1940. For fiscal year 1940, no funds are required for operation. For fiscal year 1941, funds are required for 12 months' operation, $2,820, or an increase of $2,820.

(5) A teletype communications circuit between Cheyenne and Billings went into operation November 15, 1940. For fiscal year 1940, funds are required for 7½ months' line rentals, $7,610. For fiscal year 1941, funds are required for 12 months' line rentals, $12,312, or an increase of $4,702.

(6) Airways lighting facilities, including beacons and lighted landing fields on the Mobile-Jacksonville route, will be ready for operation approximately July 1, 1940. For fiscal year 1940, no funds are required for operation. For fiscal year 1941, funds are required for operation for 12 months, $27,310, or an increase of $27,310.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I do not desire unduly to prolong the discussion, but I feel so keenly the utter unwisdom and the dangerous character of the precedent which the Senate of the United States would set if it were responsible for cutting the appropriation for air-safety facilities that I think a few more minutes devoted to their history and the present status will not be entirely wasted.

After the death of Senator Cutting, which has been referred to, the Committee on Commerce, presided over by the late Senator Copeland, made the investigation which has been mentioned. The able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] was a member of that committee. It was not my privilege to serve in this body at that time, but I read the report of the hearings carefully and at great length, and the amazing and lurid picture that was painted of the aviation industry, both under the old Bureau of Air Commerce and under the various correlated agencies, presented a scandal.

After that the Congress of the United States undertook a definite policy upon the recommendation of the Committee on Commerce. That policy was to establish about 30,000 miles of lighted and equipped air lines in the United States. The airways were equipped with beacon lights, radio beams, or "ranges," as they are sometimes called, lighted emergency landing fields, teletype machines, whereby weather reports could be broadcast hourly throughout the country. In a few short years, under the auspices of the Aeronautics Authority and the enterprise and industry of private air-line operators, 27,000 miles of our national airways system have been lighted and equipped with all the latest scientific devices for the protection of life and of the aviation industry. In these few years we have accomplished the equipping of 27,000 miles, and only 4,000 miles remain to be similarly safeguarded.

It was the policy of Congress to make large appropriations for radio ranges, beacon lights, emergency landing fields, and other forms of equipment; and last year, without substantial dissent in either the Senate or the House, we authorized and appropriated $7,000,000 to build radio-range stations, and placed in them expensive equipment, and all the various other things that go with them.

Those ranges are now actually under construction. They are coming into operation every day. On June 30 of this year there will not be any money with which to man them, if the million-dollar cut which the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, with all due respect to them, recommended shall go into effect.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, does the Senator mean that there will be no money with which to man those stations?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I mean that as to the 50 new stations which will have gone into operation during this year—there may be some money with which to man them, but as to the stations which will go into operation during the fiscal year 1941, there will be practically no money with which to man them adequately.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator knows we are appropriating for the fiscal year beginning in 1940. When he speaks of construction for another year, may we not be making unnecessary anticipatory appropriations? I am not speaking of construction, if the Senator please.

The Senator is speaking about 3,000 miles of construction.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. A portion of it has already been constructed and the remainder is under a continuing program of construction. The construction appropriations have been made. The Senate committee is making construction appropriations in the bill under consideration, and yet Senators are refusing to allow sufficient personnel adequately to man the facilities in question.

Mr. ADAMS. That is a question of fact. The Appropriations Committee heard the members of the Authority. The committee found that they were providing for between 600 and 700 additional employees. The committee, interested in safety as much as anything else, felt that the witnesses did not justify their request.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I read the hearings very carefully, and I may say to the Senator from Colorado that the witnesses pointed out exactly where the new personnel would be used. They told the committee that they would have to employ from four to five men in every one of these new radio-range stations which, if there were approximately 50 new stations, would require several hundred men.

Mr. ADAMS. There are one or more stations in every State.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. There is none in Idaho.

Mr. ADAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. Coeur d'Alene seems to be on one of the lists.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. It is not on this airways list.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. There should be some in Idaho and there are some in Colorado. But, if I may interrupt the Senator, I wish to say that there will be no manning of the following stations unless this appropriation is set back where it was. The line from San Antonio to Houston—

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Nevada just made the remark "unless the appropriation is set back where it was." The Senator realizes that the Appropriations Committee has recommended one and a quarter million dollars in excess of the current appropriation, does he not?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator mean set back to what the House allowed, or what the Civil Aeronautics Authority has requested?

Mr. McCARRAN. The amount which the House allowed.

I may clarify my position, with the permission of the Senator from Idaho, by saying that the Budget estimate was cut by the House—

Mr. RUSSELL. It was reduced twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then what the House allowed is now cut about $1,200,000 by the Senate committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. But still the Senate committee has allowed an increase of more than $1,200,000 above the current appropriation for the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I was therefore interested to know why it was going to be necessary to close up stations when the Civil Aeronautics Authority had received an increase in appropriation of $1,200,000.

Mr. McCARRAN. They are being constructed now, and the construction will be completed by the end of the fiscal year. We are now appropriating for the next fiscal year. The construction which will be completed during the present fiscal year, for which appropriation has been made, will be undermanned in the next fiscal year, and I was about to name the lines affected.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is what I understood the Senator to say in his opening statement, to which I listened with great care.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. I ask permission to interrupt the Senator from Idaho once more to answer the Senator from Colorado, because I know he is interested in this matter quite as much as I am, and I know he represents a State where these facilities count more than in any one State in the Union, because his State is located in the dangerous section of the Rocky Mountain region where these facilities count most, and where the greatest crashes and the greatest disasters have occurred. I refer to the lines that will not be manned unless this appropriation is restored.

San Antonio to Houston.

New Orleans to Jacksonville.

Memphis to Tampa.

Las Vegas to Fresno.

Tampa to Miami.

Cincinnati to Columbus.

Springfield to Chicago.

Grand Island, Denver, and Laramie.

Newark to Buffalo.

Los Angeles to Phoenix.

Those lines, with all the facilities, pursuant to the mandate of this body already set up or which will be set up between now and the end of the fiscal year, will be undermanned unless we provide for manning them by the appropriation we are trying to restore.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho. I wonder if he did not misspeak himself prior to the time he was interrupted by the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Idaho said that if this cut was made these stations would not be manned after July 1, 1941. Did he not mean during the fiscal year 1941, and after July 1, 1940?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Nineteen forty is what I meant. I thank the Senator for the correction. Of course I meant for the fiscal year 1940-41.

In conclusion let me say that there are three reasons why the Senate should not undertake the dangerous experiment of cutting $1,000,000 off the amount necessary for the maintenance of these safety devices. In the first place, as the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has pointed out, it is not good business. We would not buy a truck and then refuse to buy gasoline to keep it in proper operation. And, as Mr. Hinckley, the chairman of the C. A. A. testified before the Appropriations Committee, it will be necessary to hire watchmen to look after all this expensive equipment, which will deteriorate if not used. So, as a matter of dollars and cents, having gone to the length we did last year of appropriating $7,000,000 to construct safety facilities and devices, we at least ought to have the consistency and the decency and the wisdom to go the length necessary to maintain them.

The second reason is found in the oft-abused phrase "national defense." If we ever should become involved in a major defensive war, one of the most important things in connection with it would be a complete air-line system designed not only to transport men and materials with safety and facility throughout the United States but designed also to enable military craft to make their transcontinental and other flights as quickly and as safely as possible. So if there is anything in the national-defense program, here is $1,000,000 that will probably contribute to it as much or more than any other $1,000,000 that Congress can spend.

The third reason is that, after the record of safety and efficiency made by the Civil Aeronautics Authority and its engineers last year, after they and the commercial air lines have put the United States in the position of leading the world in aviation, both in flight accomplishments and safety, it is exceedingly dangerous for the Senate of the United States to undertake to cut an appropriation which has been approved by the Bureau of the Budget. Let me suggest that should there be a fatal accident on any of the airways which are now being flown, but which are not equipped properly, if the facilities provided by Uncle Sam, merely lying there with a watchman in charge, could have prevented that accident, the Senate of the United States would justly come under censure and criticism from the country.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I may call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that very situation, in a minor degree, was one of the things that was much criticized by the Copeland committee in connection with the old Bureau of Air Commerce of the Commerce Department. We found that at the time of the Cutting accident and, indeed, a series of dreadful accidents, that the lines did have certain equipment packed up in warehouses, equipment which in some cases had deteriorated until it was no good at all, because, as they contended, they did not have the money with which to operate it.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I thank the Senator. I remember now reading that very testimony in the record of that hearing.

I say for three reasons the appropriation should not be cut. First, as a matter of common ordinary business sense; secondly; as a matter of national defense; and, thirdly, because it would be very unwise and dangerous for the Senate to cut an appropriation having to do with such important safety measures. I submit that despite the conscientiousness with which the subcommittee and the full Committee on Appropriations have worked and despite their usual fine judgment on these matters, the Senate should reject the committee amendment and adopt the item as approved by the Budget and passed by the House of Representatives.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, just as an evidence to indicate the importance of this amendment to the air lines affected in the State of Florida, I can say that the route between New Orleans and Jacksonville was inaugurated only about a year ago, and that during that 12-month period in the city of Tallahassee alone, which is the smallest station, I believe, on the entire route, 5,000 passengers were taken on by and discharged from this one air line. Since it affects three lines in my State which are constantly rendering a great service to the public, I certainly hope that the lives of the people using those air services will not be jeopardized by what I consider to be an unreasonable diminution in the appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not quite appreciate the suggestion that it is not the decent thing for the Committee on Appropriations to make any reduction in the Budget estimate. Members of the Appropriations Committee are as much interested in the progress of aviation and in the safety of those who travel by air as are any other Members of the Senate.

The arguments which have been presented would sustain a demand for an appropriation of $100,000,000 as well as one of $1,000,000. In other words, there is a total absence of persuasive details, other than the general suggestion that if we do not appropriate this $1,000,000 there will not be an air line in the United States running. The inference that is carried is that there will be nothing but night and darkness, danger and disaster.

The Committee on Appropriations heard the witnesses. The committee is confronted with a disagreeable job. Senators who do not serve on the Appropriations Committee do not understand the problems of members of that committee, trying to do a disagreeable duty. Every agency and every Department comes before the committee demanding increases. It is a very easy thing to say, "yes" and to grant the increases. In substance, we are told that if we do not increase the appropriation by an additional $1,000,000 we shall have upon our shoulders the responsibility for disaster and loss of life.

As I have said, no Members of the Senate are more concerned with safety on the airways than are members of the Appropriations Committee. I do not know how much money may be required. Members of the Appropriations Committee cannot know. They were impressed with the idea that the Civil Aeronautics Authority was making requests in excess of its necessities. We exercised our best judgment, and now we are told on the floor of the Senate that it is not a decent thing not to grant all the demands and all the requests made by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. We are taken back to the death of a colleague. We are taken back through days of disaster and injury. Then we are told that in the past 10 months not a single fatal injury has occurred. Therefore, inasmuch as we have reached the point of safety, we must tremendously increase the expenses. I am inclined to think that after we have reached such a point that for 10 months the airways have been traveled without disaster, we might stop and figure the cost. In these days costs are going to mean something to us.

There is no pleasure in talking economy. Those of us who have the misfortune—and it is a misfortune—to be on the Appropriations Committee are subjected to lashing after lashing because we think that not every demand should be granted merely because it has a good purpose.

If the Civil Aeronautics Authority is as efficient in protecting the airways of the Nation as it is in propaganda, it is a marvel. I know what has happened to the Senate. I have on my desk the propaganda. I am told what will happen to my State if we do not make the appropriation. Propaganda has gone all through the Senate that in this State and in the other State this line or that line will not be operated unless we make this increase, which amounts to less than 10 percent. One would think that a 90-percent disaster would result if we should not grant the increase.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Of course, the Senator may have been subjected to propaganda, and if he says he was, he was.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator says he was.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I understand that. So far as my State is concerned the $1,000,000 does not mean a thing to it. It will be noted from the schedule which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] read that Idaho is not included. We do not get a penny of it, directly or indirectly.

So far as propaganda is concerned, I have never talked directly or indirectly to any member or employee of the Civil Aeronautics Authority concerning this measure. I will say further that, so far as I know, no member or employee of the Civil Aeronautics Authority even knew I was going to make these remarks. So if the Senator chooses to charge an honest expression of opinion on the floor which may be contrary to the findings of the Appropriations Committee as succumbing to propaganda, for my part I wish to deny it.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not think any Senator would yield to propaganda. I have not mentioned the Senator from Idaho. I think, of course, that the efforts which have been made are vain so far as every Member of the Senate is concerned. I merely say that widespread efforts have been made and, of course, in vain.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. So far as the question of propaganda is concerned, I should like to say to the Senator from Colorado that whatever may have been his experience—which is naturally more or less unique as a member of the subcommittee—if a single letter on this subject has been addressed to me from the State of Missouri or anywhere else, it has not been called to my attention. The only person with whom I have had the slightest discussion upon the matter is a member of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, to whom I telephoned, and whom I asked to come to my office to discuss the matter with me, because I was interested in the matter from my service on the Copeland committee and by reason of the fact that I happen to be chairman of the Subcommittee on Civil Aeronautics of the Committee on Commerce. The only information which came to me came at my request.

Mr. ADAMS. I know that no one would presume to endeavor to influence the Senator from Missouri. I know it would be a dangerous thing to do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Further discussing the question of propaganda, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that although I am a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I am not a member of the subcommittee which considered the independent offices bill. When the full committee was called upon to act upon the report of the subcommittee, the Senator may remember that I raised the same question in the committee. I asked why the appropriation recommended by the Bureau of the Budget was being reduced. At that time no one representing the Civil Aeronautics Authority or representing any aviation company had made any representation whatever to the Senator from Wyoming. Afterward I called upon the Civil Aeronautics Authority for information with respect to what the effect of the appropriation would be. So I join the ranks of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] in explaining to the Senator from Colorado that propaganda has had no effect upon my attitude.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have the highest regard for the members of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. They are smart; they are able; they are not crude. Effective propaganda is not the kind that comes directly to a Senator and attempts to say to him, "You and your district are going to be harmed if you do not do this." That is not intelligent propaganda. If any Senator understood that I was suggesting that anyone would have the temerity, the insolence, or the impudence to go directly to a Senator in a crude way, such a thing is far from my thought. I do suggest that if anyone will look at the reports filed with the committee in the printed record, he will find long lists of communities and States which would be adversely affected if the appropriation asked for were not made. These things are not called to the attention of any individual Senator; of course not. I know that no one would be freer from any possible influence by propaganda than would my dear friend from Wyoming.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly. I am willing to put the Senator on record with other Senators. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. I planned to address myself to another topic. I felt that the question of propaganda had already been pretty well covered.

I wish to ask the Senator whether or not it is correct that if the appropriation is not increased existing installations will have to be abandoned.

Mr. ADAMS. I think not. I think the record will bear out that statement.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. The testimony of Mr. Hester was as follows:

Mr. HESTER. That is for next year. The money we need now, for 1941, is to operate many facilities that are being completed right now, during 1940.

Senator RUSSELL. Are they not in operation?

Mr. HESTER. No; they are now under construction.

Senator RUSSELL. Do you have complete facilities already set up that are not in operation?

Mr. HESTER. We have some nearing completion that are not in operation.

Senator BYRNES. It is solely a question of how fast you put them in operation.

Mr. HESTER. Yes. Of course, if they are not put into operation, the investment is lost. Congress has authorized the appropriation. Here is the situation: We have 275 radio ranges in the United States, or will have with the completion of this 1940 construction program.

Senator ADAMS. How many would you have without that?

Mr. HESTER. I would say we would probably have about 235. I would like to correct that figure for the record.

Then he inserted a note:

NOTE.—The correct figures are 273 in continental United States plus 11 in Territorial possessions; total, 284 upon completion 1940 construction program, 239 at start of fiscal year 1940.

Mr. LODGE. Would it, then, be accurate to say that no existing installations now being operated would have to be abandoned if the increase were not granted?

Mr. BYRNES. That is the understanding of the committee. As we gathered from the testimony, the question was as to how fast the facilities should be put into operation. The estimate was for 632 new employees, and for an expenditure, in addition to the employees, of certain amounts of money for supplies, gasoline, and oil; $230,000 for travel; an increase for rentals; and a number of other items. The question is, How fast should the various routes be manned and equipped? If $12,000,000 were appropriated, the Civil Aeronautics Authority would have two and a half million dollars for this purpose, as compared with the appropriation for the present year. If the recommendations of the Senate committee should be adopted, they would have one and a half million dollars. Therefore they could not man as many routes as they could under the House bill. They could not have 632 new employees. They would have to get along with a lesser number of employees and somewhat less equipment. So the statement that there is one and a half million dollars increase for the next year under the Senate committee recommendation and two and a half million dollars under the House bill is a correct statement.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, would it be fair to say that the reduction would slow up the rate of growth, but it would not curtail the existing structure?

Mr. BYRNES. As the Senator has heard from the statement of the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Missouri, under the existing appropriation of nine and a half million dollars, for this year, they have made a wonderful record and the number of accidents has been infinitesimal. Next year they will have not only that sum, nine and a half million dollars, but will have a larger sum, namely, $11,000,000. I am satisfied, realizing the excellent work they have been doing, they could do a one and a half million dollar better job with $11,000,000 than they could with nine and a half million dollars.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me the interruption, he will recall that Mr. Hinckley testified, I think, that for about 10 months there has been no fatal accident in commercial aviation, under the present appropriation, which is a million and a half dollars less than the one that is proposed. I think he testified that there had been made the wonderful record—and I think it is a remarkable record that in all commercial aviation there had not been a death due to accident in 10 months. That is the statement, as I recall it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, for the Civil Aeronautics Authority the estimates for 1941 show a total increase of $3,400,000. The reduction, if it can be called a reduction, merely lowers the increase a million dollars. I think the increase is more rapid than heretofore. Instead of the reduction slowing up the work, I think it would merely fail to expedite the construction.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator, while he has the record before him, state what was the Budget estimate?

Mr. ADAMS. The Budget estimate for civil aeronautics was $28,921,000. The appropriation for 1940 was $25,518,000. The bill as it came from the other House provided $27,900,000, and the reduction which the Senate committee suggests would make it, roughly, $26,800,000. I am giving the round figures only, I will say to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, in order that this matter may be clear, if I may have the attention of the Senator from South Carolina, there is no question, is there, that if the million dollars is not restored the physical facilities which have been appropriated for, which are now under construction and which will become completed in the year 1941, will have to lie idle? There is no question, I take it, about that?

Mr. BYRNES. I must say I cannot answer the question; I presume the Senator from Colorado can. I did not know what the Senator from Idaho suggests would be the effect; I am interested to know it. The only information we had is in this statement.

The justification of the estimate shows an appropriation of nine and a half million dollars for the current year, and then shows the additional amounts requested for 1941. That we may have all that the committee acted upon, I will read the items of increase requested for 1941:

Personal services, departmental, $22,426—

These are the figures in excess of those for the current year—

Field, permanent, $1,109,204.

Field, temporary, $20,255.

Administrative promotions, $70,220.

Difference in lapses between 1941 and 1940: Departmental, $12,517; field, minus, $11,092; deduction of salary costs accruing for positions not to be filled during entire fiscal year, $221,900.

Net increases, personal services, $1,445,430.

Then, there are set forth the other items of expense. The Senator from Georgia asks that I point out that the amount last stated is an increase over what they have for personal services for this year ending June 30.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I think that is understood.

Mr. BYRNES. The remainder of the increase is for other objects of expenditure:

Gasoline and oil, $199,217.

Storage, $10,220.

Communication service, $52,941.

Travel, $230,079.

Transportation of things, $24,560.

Printing and binding, $500.

Heat, light, power, water, etc., $174,463.

Rentals, $99,763.

Repairs and alterations, $72,692.

Special and miscellaneous, $7,166.

Purchase of trucks, $4,442.

Purchase of aircraft, $70,000.

Stores, $129,681.

Making an increase in other objects of expense over the current year of $1,044,083. Adding net increase in the personnel makes a total of $2,489,513 over the appropriations for the current year. That is what they told us they were going to spend the money for.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to remind the Senator that it was also testified before the committee that their present plans contemplate an increase in personnel at some of their existing stations, and that all their existing stations and the stations which would be created would be manned by from 4 to 15 persons. I do not know whether that influenced any other member of the committee, but I concluded that some of these stations might be able to get along with 10 employees or 8 employees rather than 15, and that if the Civil Aeronautics Authority were willing to make any attempt whatever to economize, out of the million-and-a-half-dollar increase which we have allowed, they could substantially increase the air-safety facilities of the Nation.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I have read the hearings with some care, and I do not find anywhere in the hearings the suggestion that they were going to add to the personnel of the radio ranges and facilities.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I can find it in the House hearings.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Oh, the Senator was referring to the House hearings?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me say to the Senator that I was reading from the House hearings, where the table to which I referred is found.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, there is no question, I think—

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Colorado has the floor, and I do not want to take his time.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I do not wish further to disturb the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from Idaho has never disturbed the Senator from Colorado, and I would be happy not only to be interrupted but yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I thank the Senator for his kindness.

I merely wish to quote one paragraph from Mr. Hester's testimony in the Senate hearings. He referred to the new stations for which some money was appropriated last year and which are now under construction. On page 127 he says:

Many of those stations are coming in this year. Some have already been constructed. Many more will come in during 1941. At some of these stations we have 4 employees stationed. At some of them we have 15 employees stationed, in order to operate them. As new stations come in we must have increased personnel. Congress has already appropriated the money for the construction of these radio ranges, and we are asking for an increase—largely for new personnel necessary to maintain and operate them.

Meaning the million dollars in question—

That is the nub of the entire argument as to whether or not we shall appropriate this year the amount they think is necessary adequately to operate stations now under construction and which will be in operation and fully equipped during 1941.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate very long. This is a transportation question. The country has more transportation facilities now than it can possibly use. As the various forms of transportation have come along, they have all been subsidized in the beginning. We have subsidized no form of transportation so heavily in the beginning as we have subsidized air transportation. In proportion to the traffic carried by the airplane, there is more Government expense and Government subsidy than on any other kind of transportation. Bear in mind that this bill carries, as a Government appropriation for the subsidization of air transportation—and that is what it is—a total of $26,721,954. Here is my distinguished friend from Missouri—

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. Not now. If the Senator will be good enough to let me proceed for 5 minutes, I will conclude.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask a question about the matter of subsidizing the railroads. Did the Senator ever hear about land grants to railroads?

Mr. REED. I said that every form of transportation had been subsidized in its initial stages. We subsidized water. We subsidized railroads. We subsidized motor-vehicle traffic. We are now subsidizing water. We are now subsidizing air transportation. The only question is how much subsidization we should grant.

I invite the attention of my distinguished friend the Senator from Missouri, who stood on the floor of the Senate within the year I have been here and called attention to the mushroom growth of the Civil Aeronautics Authority since the jurisdiction of air transportation had been taken out of the Department of Commerce; and today the Civil Aeronautics Authority, less than a year old—about 2 years old—has 6,000 employees.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. No; if the Senator from Missouri will permit me, I will yield in a moment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator referred to me, and I should like to explain to the Senator what I did say and what I still say.

Mr. REED. I shall be happy to yield, as the Senator knows, in a moment; but I want to finish this matter.

In the first place, I agree with the committee. The committee is appropriating this year more money than ever before for subsidy for air transportation. There happens to be in my State a very considerable airplane industry; and if Senators do not think that sometimes they "get tough" with me and crude with me as to my voting for everything the air industry wants, they are mistaken. I am willing to vote for any amount that is reasonably necessary to develop commercial air transportation, air transportation for national defense, or air transportation for any other purpose; but if the Senate should vote all the money that the air industry wants we would double the present amount in the next 2 or 3 years.

As a matter of fact, I have just finished a long trip to Kansas by airplane, both ways. I am a frequent user of air transportation. In Kansas they called me "the air Governor" when I was Governor, because I used airplanes a great deal. I have no prejudice in this matter. I am merely appealing to the Senate to use common sense. We are already subsidizing this industry, to which I have no objection, because we subsidized all other forms of transportation in their infancy. We are continuing to subsidize water transportation. We shall probably continue to subsidize air transportation for a considerable period; but if the judgment of the Appropriations Committee, as stated by the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from South Carolina, correctly states the situation—and I have no doubt that it does—I think the Senate should vote to sustain the committee as to the amount appropriated; and those of us, including myself, who have stood on this floor and pleaded for economy, who have wanted to approach a balanced Budget as much as we could without increasing taxes, ought not to turn down the Appropriations Committee by adding a million dollars that has no foundation except a very nebulous foundation so far as the airplane industry is concerned.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I prefer to claim the floor in my own right.

Mr. McCARRAN rose.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator from Nevada wish to interrupt me?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not care to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken on five items at once; namely, all the amendments in that section, which are under the heads of general administration, economic regulation, maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities, safety regulation, and establishment of air-navigation facilities. I ask unanimous consent that we have one vote as to all of those items.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. I object until I am better advised. Will the Senator from Nevada state whether all of the specifications suggested by him compose the $1,000,000 cut?

Mr. McCARRAN. It is a little in excess of a million dollars. It has been stated in general terms as a million dollars. It actually amounts to about $1,200,000, as I recall.

Mr. McNARY. The amendment is a reduction from $11,000,000 to $10,000,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is one amendment. There are five amendments in the section.

Mr. McNARY. Are we voting on this one first, or does the Senator desire to have the Senate vote on all of them at one time?

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate vote on all at once.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has no authority to grant unanimous consent to that.

Mr. McCARRAN. I simply ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia object?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to interpose an objection, because the first amendment relates only to about 72 or 74 new employees who I understand will chiefly be here in the District of Columbia. I think there is a great deal of difference in the items, one being for air safety in the field and the other for employees largely in the District of Columbia. I therefore object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was simply going to add that I do not think it can be done by unanimous consent. It involves the overthrow of the rules of the Senate. Inasmuch as objection has been made, I do not care to present that matter.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to state that I presided over the subcommittee meetings, and I also presided over the meetings of the full committee; and I am rather curious to know, if there has been no pressure brought to bear upon the committee, why the committee should have behaved "indecently," as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK] suggests. I resent the statement. It is not true.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I used the words "the decent thing to do." It was not my intention, if the Senator please, even remotely to suggest that any member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations has done anything that was indecent.

Mr. GLASS. It may not have been the Senator's intention, but he directly did that very thing.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. What I intended to say was that it would not be the decent thing for the Senate to do now, in my opinion, to ratify this million-dollar reduction; and I offer my sincerest apologies to the Senator if I did say it, or, if I did not say it, if the Senator so construed what I said.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I should like to make a short statement.

Various Senators have referred to the action of the committee or the views of the committee as though the action or opinion of the committee had been unanimous. Such was not the case. I am a member of the general committee and also a member of the subcommittee. I do not share the opinions that have been expressed as the opinions of the committee; and I shall take pleasure in voting to increase the amount provided by the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$1,659,191" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,543,932".

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I hope this amendment may be voted down and that the bill as it came from the House may be sustained.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask for the yeas and nays on the committee amendment. We might as well have one record vote. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. ADAMS voted in the affirmative when his name was called.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I think the Chair should state the particular amendment on which we are about to vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the amendment was just read by direction of the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but it was read so rapidly, and there was so much noise, that very few, if any, of the Senators, aside from members of the committee, know upon what they are about to vote.

Mr. McCARRAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the roll call has commenced. A Senator has voted when his name was called; and, under the rule, nothing can stop it. The clerk will proceed with the roll call.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the vote now about to be taken on the amendment on page 9?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk of the Senate read that on page 8, line 6, the proposed amendment is to strike out "$1,659,191" and substitute "$1,543,932". The clerk will resume the calling of the roll.

The call of the roll was resumed.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], and vote "nay." I am not advised how either Senator would vote if present and voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent, attending the funeral of the late Representative Dowell, of Iowa.

The Senators from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST and Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] are detained from the Senate on important public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in important committee meetings.

I announce the following general pairs: The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]; and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. DAVIS. Announcing my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

The result was—yeas 34, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—34

Adams	Gerry	Lodge	Smith
Barkley	Glass	McKellar	Stewart

The VICE PRESIDENT. On this vote the yeas are 34 and the nays are 34. The Chair votes "yea."

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 12, after the word "witnesses", to strike out "$519,222" and insert "$469,222", so as to read:

Economic regulation: For all expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of title IV of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and all other provisions of said act relating to economic regulation, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; fees and mileage of witnesses; $469,222.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be rejected, because it is one of the amendments discussed during the afternoon which would vitally affect the pending measure. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. LUCAS (when Mr. SLATTERY's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on business.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). Adhering to my previous statement, I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent, attending the funeral of the late Representative Dowell, of Iowa.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in important committee meetings.

I announce the following general pairs: The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS]; and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—39

Adams	Glass	Lucas	Smith

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 9, after the word "receipts", to strike out "$12,000,000" and insert "$11,000,000"; so as to read:

Maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities: For all necessary expenses of the Office of the Administrator and the operation and maintenance of air-navigation facilities, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase (including exchange), operation, maintenance, repair, and overhaul of aircraft; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $13,550), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles; purchase of special wearing apparel and equipment for aviation purposes (including snowshoes and skis); salaries and traveling expenses of employees detailed by the Administrator to attend courses of training conducted by the Government or industries serving aviation; not to exceed 3 cents per mile for travel, in their personally owned automobiles within the limits of their official posts of duty, of employees engaged in the maintenance and operation of remotely controlled air-navigation facilities; and for the purchase of necessary food supplies (not exceeding $2,500) for storage at isolated stations for emergency use, the cost of which when consumed by employees shall be collected therefrom, and deposited in miscellaneous receipts; $11,000,000.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Senate up to this point has voted in favor of sustaining the committee amendments. But in connection with this amendment I draw the attention of the Senate to a program established by the Congress of the United States which has provided greater safety for human beings in air travel and safer conveyance of property in the continental United States and beyond the continental United States than any measure yet enacted. If we vote down the next amendment, then we cannot blame anyone save and except ourselves if disaster results because of failure to carry out an established program, a part of which has been put into effect up to the present time, a part of which will be put into effect between now and the end of the fiscal year, but which, although partially completed, cannot be manned, cannot be carried forward, cannot be operated unless with the money proposed to be stricken from the bill by the amendment upon which we are now about to vote.

I hope the amendment of the committee reducing this item by $1,000,000 may not be sustained. I ask for the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is speaking of the committee amendment reducing the amount from $12,000,000 to $11,000,000?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. What was the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget on that item?

Mr. McCARRAN. I think the estimate of the Bureau of the Budget was $12,000,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The estimate of the Bureau of the Budget was $12,000,000, and the House adopted that estimate of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. McNARY. And this cut by the Senate committee is less than the Budget estimate?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. One million dollars less than the Budget estimate, and $1,000,000 less than the amount approved by the House of Representatives.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. And one and a half million dollars more than the amount for the current fiscal year.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the Senator from Nevada to what use is this money to be put?

Mr. McCARRAN. First of all let me recite to the Senator—

Mr. McNARY. What I want to know is, Has it any relation to flying by long distances over sea and land?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes; it relates altogether to such flying.

Mr. McNARY. Does it relate to the safety of flying between the east and the west coasts?

Mr. McCARRAN. It relates entirely to that.

Mr. McNARY. In particular, what does it provide for? Does it provide for more ground, more lighting, more air fields?

Mr. McCARRAN. It provides for more safety appliances by way of beacon lights, by way of radio guides, by way of protection to landing fields, by way of weather reports transmitted from the ground to each pilot as he flies across the country; by way of installation of teletype devices; by way of installation and manning of every known device looking to safety. This is the safety item in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to ask either the Senator from Nevada or the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], or both, if the $11,000,000 to which the committee has reduced this figure, is one million and a half dollars more than appropriated for the current year, or is the $12,000,000 a million and a half dollars more?

Mr. RUSSELL. Eleven million dollars is one and one-half million dollars more than the appropriation for the current year, which was approximately nine and one-half million dollars.

Mr. BARKLEY. For the same purpose?

Mr. RUSSELL. For the same purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. In that respect let it be known that we set up a program which calls for carrying it out year by year. This is only one item of the program. It is not in excess of the current Budget.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When the Senator asks if it is for the same purpose, it should be remembered that cost of operation increases with installations. For instance, I have here a statement of a number of specific instances by way of example which I obtained permission to put in the RECORD a while ago. I shall not burden the RECORD by reading more than one or two of these instances, which show the necessity for operation keeping abreast of installation.

For instance, at Millinocket, Maine, a radio range and communications station went into operation January 27, 1940. For the fiscal year 1940 funds are required for 5 months' operation of $4,980. For the fiscal year 1941, to keep that same station in operation, funds will be required for 12 months' operation, amounting to $11,949, or an increase of $6,969.

For instance, at Dothan, Ala., a similar station will go into operation April 1, 1940. It is already provided for, already under construction. It will be in operation on April 1, 1940. For the fiscal year 1940 the funds that are required for 3 months' operation of that station are $3,055. For the fiscal year 1941 the funds that are required for 12 months' operation of that station are $11,949, or an increase of $8,894.

Instances of that sort might be multiplied to show that the cost of operation of stations installed in the fiscal year 1940 will necessarily not be fully reflected until the fiscal year 1941.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May not the situation be summarized in one short sentence? Congress by appropriations heretofore made has authorized and instructed the Civil Aeronautics Authority to construct ground facilities which are now in the process of completion, and which cannot be manned and cannot be operated if this committee amendment is sustained.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That statement is entirely correct and epitomizes the whole situation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has inquired as to whether or not the amount allowed by the committee was in excess of the appropriations for the current year. I do not desire to discuss this matter at length, but I do wish to read briefly from the testimony that was submitted to the committee. I may say, Mr. President, that the committee could only be guided by the evidence that was presented by the Civil Aeronautics Authority. As all Members of the Senate well know, these hearings are ex parte. There is no person there pointing out to the committee that this or that item is not necessary. The only witnesses who appear are appearing for the purpose of impressing the Committee on Appropriations with the necessity for the item in which they are interested.

Mr. Hester of the Commission, in appearing before the Committee on Appropriations, as will appear on page 126 of the Senate committee hearings, made this statement:

This year, fiscal year 1940, we have an appropriation of $9,510,487 for maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities. For next year we have asked for $12,000,000 to operate and maintain air-navigation facilities, which means an increase for 1941 over 1940 of $2,489,513.

From that sum of $12,000,000 the committee recommended a reduction of $1,000,000, which leaves an increase of $1,489,500 over the appropriation available for the current year.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I will be glad to yield.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has stated that in this increased item there should be provided a considerable amount for the purchase of beacon lights and other facilities to be used at the new stations which have been put into operation. He states that a large part of its goes for teletype service to be used at the various new stations which are being put into operation. If that be true, the Civil Aeronautics Authority should have brought it to the attention of the proper committees of the Congress of the United States.

I hold in my hand the hearings before the House committee, in which Mr. Hinckley offered the justification for the appropriation of $12,000,000.

Regular appropriation, 1940 act, $9,510,487.

That is the same figure which Mr. Hester gave the committee.

In the increase of $2,400,000, roughly speaking, there is $1,445,430 for additional personnel. I stated a few moments ago that the Commission was proposing to increase the personnel in stations which are now in being. I have not had time to run through the entire hearing, but on page 792 I find this statement to confirm my impression that there was to be a substantial increase in personnel in stations which have been in existence for some time. This is the justification submitted by the Civil Aeronautics Authority itself to the House committee:

At 13 of the major stations referred to we now have 2 maintenance electricians in the grade SP-7. However, in order to obtain a more satisfactory organization in 1941 it is proposed to have 1 principal radio electrician, SP-7, and 1 senior radio electrician, SP-6, at such stations. The availability of 13 principal radio electricians from these 13 stations has been considered in estimating the number of additional electricians required for the expanded Federal airways system as it will be on July 1, 1940, after the 1940 construction program is completed.

That is one illustration, in which they propose to add 26 additional high-grade and, comparatively speaking, highly compensated, electricians to the facilities which are already in existence, facilities which have enabled the Authority to come before the Congress and boast that for the past 10 months there has not been a single fatality in the operation of the air lines of the United States.

I want to go back to the remainder of the two-and-a-half-million-dollar increase which the Civil Aeronautics Authority is requesting at the hands of the Congress.

I do not find any requested increase in appropriations for the purchase of equipment of the kind referred to by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. In my opinion such equipment is not involved in this item. This is what the Civil Aeronautics Authority says it wants to spend the money for: Gasoline and oil, they want to increase their expenditures by $199,217; for storage, they wish an increase of $10,220 over and above the amount which they expended in the year 1940; for communication service, they wish an increase of $52,941.

The next item is travel expenses. Bear in mind that the Senate has just rejected an item which would increase the personnel in the central administration of the Authority by about 74, so there is no necessity to have all this additional travel expense. We voted down the appropriation for 74 additional employees which they are requesting, many of whom I assume would operate out of the District of Columbia. For travel expenses they want an increase of $230,079. What would that add to the electric beams or teletype service to which Senators have referred with so much fervor?

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I will ask the Senator to permit me to yield first to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. I had hoped to be able to give the Senate the information which was before the Committee on Appropriations when we voted very substantial increases over this year's appropriation. It is improper to speak of the amount recommended by the committee as a reduction, because the Senate committee voted an increase over the appropriations which were made for the year 1940.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to wait until the Senator completes his remarks.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to read to the Senate the various items which the Civil Aeronautics Authority presented to the proper committees of the Congress as the purposes for which they wish to spend the increase in appropriations which they are seeking.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I wish to make an inquiry from the Senator from Georgia, as to the increased travel allowances.

Mr. RUSSELL. The amount recommended by the committee represents an increase over and above the appropriation for the present year. The committee assumed that if the Authority was able to operate so efficiently that it could prevent any fatality for this year, it would not need the entire amount of $230,000 for travel for the next year.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. I should like to answer the Senator, if he will yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Every new radio range station which goes into operation has radio beams which extend out in four directions, requiring new patrol pilots, who are employees of the Commission, and who fly the Commission's ships. They constantly fly the beams, night and day, with delicate scientific instruments which tell them whether or not the beams are operating properly, or whether they are in any way out of kilter. Of course, as new stations come into existence new patrol pilots, among other personnel, must be hired, and they must have aviation gasoline to travel. They travel all the time. That would be one way in which the increased travel expenses would be used directly in the interest of safety.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Idaho is so well informed on this whole matter that I dislike to dispute, or even question, any statement he might make. However, if the Senator had been listening he would have heard me read that the Authority is requesting an increase of $199,217 for gasoline and oil, in addition to an increase of $230,079 for travel expenses, whereas it is asking an increase of only $70,000 for the purchase of aircraft. I submit it is out of all proportion and out of all reason to suppose that $199,000 worth of gasoline and $230,000 worth of travel expenses would be required to use one or two new airplanes, which is about all that could be bought with the $70,000 appropriation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator does not object, I should like to finish my reference to the hearings, and give the Senate the benefit of what the Appropriations Committee had.

In the transportation of things an increase of $24,560 is asked.

Mr. BYRNES. Transportation of what?

Mr. RUSSELL. Transportation of things. I assume, in this bill as in the ordinary appropriation bill, that is to pay the expense of moving the household equipment of employees of the Commission who are transferred from place to place, as well as the transfer of equipment belonging to the Commission.

For printing and binding an increase of $500 is asked; for heat, light, power, water, and so forth, $174,463; for rentals, $99,763—approximately $100,000; for repairs and alterations, $72,682; for special and miscellaneous items, $7,166; for the purchase of trucks, $4,442; for the purchase of aircraft, $70,000; and for stores, which item is not broken down, $129,681.

Mr. President, from the very wide variety of those demands, gasoline and oil and traveling expenses, taking up about a third of the $1,000,000, besides the additional personnel requested, the committee felt that the Civil Aeronautics Authority should be able to function fairly well with an increase of $1,500,000 over and above its appropriation for the current year.

I do not know what prompted other members of the committee; but speaking for myself I had investigated some of the other appropriation bills and some of the other Budget estimates which have been submitted to the Congress of the United States, and I could not justify, or even tolerate, an appropriation bill for the farming interests of this country that was reduced 44 percent, when we have before us an appropriation bill for independent offices which shows an increase of more than $24,000,000 over the current appropriation. I therefore voted to bring some of the appropriations back somewhere in line with the appropriations which were made for the year 1940.

I am frank to say that I think this particular item could bear some further reduction, because I do not think we ought to set the precedent of making fish of one bureau or agency and fowl of another, increasing this item by $1,500,000 while we are working to bring about drastic reductions in the current appropriations of other agencies and departments of the Government which are just as important to the general economy and the every-day life of large segments of the population of the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], and I wish to thank him for his forbearance in permitting me to complete my statement.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am very glad to accommodate the Senator from Georgia. I wish to ask something by way of information. In explanation, let me say that I appreciate the problem with which the committee has to struggle, not only in this instance, but in all appropriation bills. I appreciate what the Senator from Georgia will have to struggle with in the agricultural bill. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that I shall do my best to aid him to restore some of those items at least to the Budget estimate.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has quoted the chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, Mr. Hinckley, a man whom I happen to know, and in whom I have every confidence. I do not believe he would come before a committee and advocate something in which he did not believe.

Also the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] has pointed out that this particular item of $1,000,000 involves the safety of those who travel by air in this country. Unfortunately, I was unable to be in the Chamber earlier this afternoon.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has just explained the reduction; but as he has explained it, I take it he has rather justified it, because the $11,000,000 is an increase over the appropriation of last year. That does not entirely justify the reduction in my mind. I should like to know, if I can find out from the Senator from Georgia or from any other member of the committee, what items were eliminated in arriving at the cut of $1,000,000. Was an arbitrary cut of $1,000,000 made?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from New Mexico will refer to this item of the bill, he will see that the question of personnel, the question of all these various supplies, the question of how many men shall be stationed at each of these air safety stations, are wholly within the discretion of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I would have hesitated in attempting to apply a specific cut to the personnel, or to the gasoline appropriation, or to the travel appropriation, because I did not know which one of those items the Authority held to be most important and the one that would be most essential in promoting air safety. The committee, therefore, left it in the discretion of the Authority, saying to them, "Here is a million and a half dollars more than you have for the current year. Apply it to these several items—to your personnel, to your purchases, to your rental account of $100,000 a year—as you see best, and continue to do the magnificent job you are doing at the present time in promoting the safety of those who travel in the air."

I may say that I am intensely interested in having air transportation just as safe as it is humanly possible to have it. I myself fly to some extent. I often take trips by airplane. Certainly I do not want to do anything here that would cause an increased hazard to those who use the airplane as a means of transportation. But certainly Congress should not shut its eyes and fail to inquire into the importance of any request that is made here by any bureau or any agency. For my part, I do not consider that I am absolutely bound by the Budget estimates.

Senators speak about the Budget recommending this and the Budget recommending that as if it were something sacred. If we followed the Budget altogether, what would be the necessity of having the Committees on Appropriations to go into these various items? If they think the Budget estimates dealt too liberally with them, the Congress should face that issue, and bring about a reduction of the appropriation. If too great a reduction is made, we should restore it without regard to the Budget.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wonder if the Senator will permit me to ask the Senator from Missouri a question in his time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has mentioned on the floor, during the course of this debate, the additional expenses made necessary by the authorizations of previous acts of Congress over the amount spent last year. Can the Senator give me an estimate of how much those are?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I have not figured how much they are in the aggregate; but the construction program for the fiscal year 1940 amounts to about $7,000,000. That is strung out throughout the full period of the fiscal year 1940. In some cases the station would go into operation, and it would be necessary to pay for the operation of the station for a period of, let us say, 11 months. In other cases the station would be in operation for only 1 month of the fiscal year 1940; but the whole program, it is assumed, should be in operation for the whole fiscal year 1941, for which we are now appropriating. Therefore, there will necessarily be a very considerable increase, based on the construction program of $7,000,000 during the fiscal year 1940. There will be a very material increase in operation in the fiscal year 1941. I have not the figures as to exactly how much that will be.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to ask the Senator a question. As I understand, the amount appropriated for construction cost this year reduced by $1,235,000 over the expenditure of last year.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is approximately correct.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The amount for maintenance is increased by $2,489,000; so there is a net increase of about $1,200,000 in the total appropriation for the Authority. The Senator has outlined the various items which go to make up this request for $12,000,000 for maintenance, as requested by the Budget Bureau and the Authority; but I have read the Senate hearings rather carefully, and while it is true that the reduction from $12,000,000 down to $11,000,000 might be taken out of gasoline and a number of other uses, is it not true that a fair and logical reading of the testimony before the Senate committee would lead to the conclusion that very largely that million-dollar reduction will be taken in the matter of personnel?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not at all think that is the necessary conclusion. I think there will be some reduction in personnel, but of course there will not be as much travel expense, as much rental expense, as much gasoline expense, as much automobile expense, if there is not so much personnel; and naturally there will be a proportionate reduction in supplies along with reductions in personnel. As I pointed out earlier on the floor, this increase in personnel contemplates an increase in the personnel that is now stationed at air fields which have been in existence for a great number of years.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will pardon me for one moment, I want to point out that it has been stated time after time on the floor by those who are opposing these reductions that the entire program would be crippled, that it would be impossible to buy lights or facilities or other things that are necessary in the program. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we have not reduced the Budget estimates for that purpose by one dime.

If Senators will turn to page 10 of the bill, on line 14, they will find this item:

For the acquisition and establishment of air-navigation facilities, including the equipment of additional civil airways for day and night flying; the construction of additional necessary lighting, radio, and other signaling and communicating structures and apparatus; the alteration and modernization of existing air-navigation facilities; and for the acquisition of the necessary sites by lease or grant.

The sum that was recommended by the Budget in full, namely, $5,265,280 has been approved by the committee.

There has been no reduction in that item in the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I draw the Senator's attention to a matter by way of question? Is it not true that these facilities, when set up and fully equipped, require that they be manned in order to be of any use in operation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, it is necessary that they be manned if they are to be of any use.

Mr. McCARRAN. And 630 additional personnel is in this item with which we are now dealing. In other words, if we do not appropriate to man these facilities, these ground guides and ground facilities in general, they had better never have been appropriated for at all, because they will remain idle and deteriorate. The real truth of the matter is that the largest part of this item is for additional personnel to make these ground facilities workable; is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me on that point, I think the record fully explains the matter. On page 127 of the RECORD, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] asked this question:

Senator BYRNES. On page 781—

Meaning page 781 of the House hearings—

You have a table, from which I assume that you propose an increase in personnel of 635 employees, for duty by June 30, 1941, over the personnel authorized for duty on June 30, 1940; 635 is quite a large increase in personnel over 4,407.

I hope Senators will listen to what Mr. Hester himself has to say about the matter:

Mr. HESTER. That is true, Senator. I am not sure that that is the exact figure, but it is a very large figure, and I do not blame you for being somewhat alarmed about it.

This is the reason he gives:

However, during a long period of time Congress did not authorize the establishment of air-navigation facilities or appropriate any money therefor. Now that Congress has appropriated large sums and we have constructed such facilities we have to operate them and additional personnel is required. However—

And this is the way in which he eases the matter off. He says it is no wonder there is surprise at the large increase in personnel of 635—and that will take a very large part of this appropriation, of course—but he says:

However, we have only 4,000 more miles of existing airways to complete, and you will see a falling off in this item from now on.

In other words, he admits the appropriation requested is large, but he holds out the hope that another year it may be reduced because there are only 4,000 miles more to be constructed to complete the system. It seems to me that under these circumstances we could well afford to cut this appropriation down a small amount.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I shall conclude by again reminding the Senate that some of this appropriation is for increasing personnel at existing stations as well as for new stations. The committee felt that in this day, when we are doing all we can to bring about a reduction and equalization of Government expenditures, the Civil Aeronautics Authority would be able to continue its fine record if we allowed them this very handsome increase of a million and a half dollars in their appropriations for 1941.

Mr. McCARRAN obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I had hoped we might get a vote today on the pending amendment, but I do not know how much more debate there will be, and if there is to be further and extended debate, I think we had better let the matter go over until tomorrow.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to enter upon some discussion of the amendment, and I understand the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] wishes to speak on it. I should like to have it go over until tomorrow.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its action on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 8067, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
February 6, 1940.

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6 to the bill (H. R. 8067) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes; and That the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate No. 5 to said bill.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5.

The motion was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7895) making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 5 and 6. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, and 21; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$9,750,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$768,188"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,194,889"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 2 and 9.

DEATH AND FUNERAL OF THOMAS L. YOUNGER

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on Sunday last there passed away in this city Mr. Thomas L. Younger, a valued and much esteemed official of the Senate, the custodian of the Senate Office Building. Mr. Younger's funeral will be held tomorrow at 11 o'clock at Arlington National Cemetery. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourn today it adjourn to meet at 1 o'clock p. m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. ASHURST (for Mr. HUGHES) from the Committee on the Judiciary reported favorably the nomination of Reed Sharp, of Tennessee, to be United States marshal for the middle district of Tennessee.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John C. Mahoney, of Rhode Island, to be a judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, vice James M. Morton, Jr., retired.

Mr. CONNALLY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Cleon A. Summers, of Oklahoma, to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Oklahoma.

Mr. DANAHER (for Mr. O'MAHONEY), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Charles H. Cox, of Georgia, to be United States marshal for the northern district of Georgia.

Mr. WILEY (for Mr. O'MAHONEY), from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of John B. Tansil, of Montana, to be United States attorney for the district of Montana.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the following nominations:

George A. Malcolm, of Michigan, to be the attorney general of Puerto Rico; and William F. Burguson, of South Carolina, to be United States marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Coast Guard.

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

COMMISSIONER, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Melvin C. Hazen, of the District of Columbia, to be Commissioner.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think this nomination will have to go over until tomorrow. I understand the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] will not urge his objection, but he desires to make a statement about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be passed over.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the nominations on the calendar.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CASSIUS C. DOWELL

The Senate resumed legislative session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions (H. Res. 373) as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
February 5, 1940.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CASSIUS C. DOWELL, a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provision of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HERRING. Mr. President, I send resolutions to the desk which I ask to have read and immediately considered.

The resolutions (S. Res. 228) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CASSIUS C. DOWELL, late a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] and the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING] as the committee provided for in the resolution just agreed to.

Mr. HERRING. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered, until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 7, 1940, at 1 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN].

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whatever the unrevealed future may hold, let us find the secret of a calm and cheerful confidence where fear holds sway and injustice reigns. We praise Thee that the secret of our security is Emmanuel, God with us. The inspired musician has declared: "Of old hast Thou laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of Thy hands. They shall perish, but Thou shalt endure; yea, all of them shall wax old as a garment; as a vesture shalt Thou change them, but Thou art the same, and Thy years shall have no end." We thank Thee for this music breaking out of the heart of the Ancient of Days, whose love for us is infinite. Arm us with that fortitude which braves the thick shadow of our humanity; O crown us with an all-conquering faith in our blessed Lord and let it give a rich morning glow to our lives in these days of our need. Heavenly Father, give rest to our beloved Speaker and bless him with peace, good health, and strength. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SUPPLEMENTAL MILITARY AND NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia submitted a report and statement on the bill (H. R. 7805) making supplemental appropriations for the military and naval establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL, 1940

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 8067), the urgent deficiency bill, with Senate amendments, and consider the same.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, after line 7, insert:

"For repairs, improvements, equipment, and supplies for Senate kitchens and restaurants, Capitol Building and Senate Office Building, including personal and other services, to be expended from the contingent fund of the Senate, under the supervision of the Committee on Rules, United States Senate, fiscal year 1940, $23,700."

"ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL"

"Senate Office Building: To reimburse the maintenance fund of the Senate Office Building for the fiscal year 1940 for necessary emergency expenditures for desks, chairs, stands, tables, and other equipment and supplies, for the use of the additional clerical assistants to Senators, under the provisions of Public Law No. 216, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved July 25, 1939, $5,000."

Page 3, strike out lines 7 to 14, inclusive.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the little urgency deficiency matter that we passed in the House. It was passed in the Senate and we have had a preliminary meeting with the Senate conferees. The only changes made in the measure by the Senate are as follows: They added the amount payable to the widow of Senator Borah. They added an item relating to an expenditure of $5,000 on the Senate Office Building. They struck out an item which the House had included which simply authorized an exchange of funds by the United States Sesquicentennial Commission. They deducted $1,000,000 from the Navy Department, an additional amount for armament and ammunition.

I ask unanimous consent to agree to all of the Senate amendments with the exception of the one striking out the matter of the Sesquicentennial Commission, and the Senate conferees have indicated that when the bill gets back to the Senate they will concur in the amendment. So there is really nothing in disagreement.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TABER. And the net result will be that the bill will be something like $960,000 below what it was when it passed the House?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. TABER. So the Senate has started on its way of trying to save a dollar instead of increasing every bill that goes over there, and we hope the Senate will keep it up.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. We all join in that hope, I will say to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the House concur in Senate amendments 1, 2, 3, 4, and 6, and that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 5. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order today on the private calendar be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement made by Louis J. Taber, of the National Grange, before the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I learn now that this statement has been put in the RECORD by the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART], and I therefore withdraw my request.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CASSIUS C. DOWELL

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, shortly after I became a Member of the House somebody made a point of order against an amendment then pending. The discussion that followed interested me because of the part played therein by the then gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL, without referring to precedents or former rulings, proceeded to state the reasons why in his judgment the point of order should be sustained.

It was, as it seemed to me, a close question, or so I thought until I listened to our friend, who by his clearness of statement and obvious knowledge of the subject convinced me as to the correctness of the position he had taken.

The Chair sustained the point of order, and for the reasons stated by Mr. DOWELL.

I then made some comment to an older Member with respect to Mr. DOWELL's evidenced familiarity with the precedents and rules, whereupon he said, "CASSIUS DOWELL forgets more about the rules and procedure of this House every night than most Members will ever know." That was a fine tribute, and the truth.

It was true not only with respect to the matters referred to but in regard to about every matter that came before the House for consideration during his long years of service.

Modest, extremely able, he made his mark in his day and on his generation for himself, his State, and the Nation. Those of us who depended upon him for friendly counsel and advice will sorely miss him.

He traveled the long road of many fruitful years to come at last, as shall we all of us, to the Utmost Gate. For him—

Behind is life and its longing,
Its trial, its trouble, its sorrow;
Beyond is the infinite morning
Of a day without its tomorrow.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, may I, too, add a word to the many tributes to our friend and colleague, Congressman DOWELL, of Iowa. My first service in the House was on the Committee on Roads of which he was chairman. It was during those crucial days when he was formulating the legislation which was the basis upon which we have since established our splendid highway system, a model to all the world, and from those days throughout his notable career I was glad to be associated with him in many contests on this floor. The thing that most impressed me throughout his entire congressional service was the way in which he subordinated partisanship to the interest of the issue before him. Repeatedly, I have seen him vote, especially on items relating to agriculture, contrary to the dictates of the party position at the time. He supported always the measures which he believed would benefit most of his own constituency and the American people at large, and his death deprives us of a stalwart ally upon whom we had depended to render yeoman service in the coming battles for farm legislation in this session. He was a great American, an uncompromising advocate for agriculture, and a devoted friend of the people.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the subject of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the reciprocal-trade agreements and to include therein a short article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a telegram which I received from the president of the National Farmers' Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by Hon. Harry H. Woodring, Secretary of War, at the Gridiron Club dinner in St. Louis on January 30.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address by Nicholas H. Dosker, administrator, City of Louisville Municipal Housing Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, also I ask unanimous consent in my remarks to include an article by George D. Riley, which appeared in the Sunday Times-Herald, entitled "Roosevelt Blanketed As Many As All Combined Into the Civil Service Since 1900."

I bring to the attention of the House H. R. 960, an act which will blanket into the civil service approximately 200,000 and possibly nearly 300,000 employees of the Government. I am positively in favor of the merit system, but I believe that people should be taken into the civil service by open competitive examinations. On the floor of the House when these people were taken into the various departments without the benefit of the civil-service rules, in fact, without examinations at all, many of us tried to secure authorization for competitive examination under the civil-service rules. However, this administration did not see fit to grant it, and President Roosevelt has blanketed in more people than ever before.

Our Government employs upward of 900,000 men and women. Of these more than 600,000 have a civil-service status. H. R. 960 seeks to cover into a permanent civil-service status most of the remainder of these workers—to cover them in without benefit of competitive examinations and to place them upon the same basis as those employees who won their spurs in competitive tests. This is most unjust, most unfair, not only to those now in the service but to thousands of others whose names are now upon the civil-service registers and who are waiting to be called to fill Government positions. Has it ever occurred to you that if the non-civil-service employees are blanketed in as a result of the enactment of H. R. 960, that it will be a long, long time before it will be necessary to hold civil-service examinations? And those now upon the registers will have to wait months and even years for appointments. The bureaus to which these persons were appointed, through political power, were emergency bureaus, of a temporary nature. Many of them are sure to be dropped—and should be. But will the employees be dropped? Not if this bill passes. They will take their places upon reemployment registers, ahead of those who won their places through their abilities in competitive examinations. That is the unfairness of it all. [Applause.]

ROOSEVELT BLANKETED AS MANY AS ALL COMBINED SINCE 1900—LAST YEARS OF ADMINISTRATIONS HAVE GENERALLY SHOWN MUCH ACTIVITY IN CLASSIFIED SERVICE

Our present administration is no exception to the rule that administrations in the first blush of excitement pay little attention to civil service. Yet in the second 2 years of administrations the custom has been to open the ranks of civil service to induct recruits by way of noncompetitive examinations.

By this system administrations often have gone down in history as the great and good friends of the open competitive examination system.

At the same time those administrations which have dared the fates and have reduced the numbers in civil service in election years have gone to defeat. Witness the Taft, Wilson, and Hoover administrations.

Taft reduced the rolls by 12,662. In November he lost. Wilson cut the rolls nearly 100,000 in 1920 and lost the election. Hoover modestly shrank the ranks by 889 in 1932, despite the fact that he blanketed in 2,614 in 1932.

After the present administration cut civil-service rolls by 11,065 in 1933 and 5,504 in 1934, the spurt went the other way to the end that today as election time neared 4,637 were added in 1935 and 43,496 were tucked into the classified service in the 1936 election year.

Even in the early 1930's there were frequent exclusions from the open competitive examination and in favor of noncompetitive tests. By 1936 the number of blanketing or noncompetitive cases totaled approximately 13,000.

While Wilson put an all-time high of 315,633 in the classified service in 1918, he permitted only 1,024 to enter by the blanket route. This means that, despite the heavy demands of war stress, Wilson held with only slight flexibility toward the open competitive system.

Wilson in 8 years blanketed in 13,186, or fewer than half the number thus far blanketed in by Roosevelt, 26,975 in 7 years. In fact, in his last year in office, Wilson blanketed in only 16.

Since the turn of the century Theodore Roosevelt has been the one President who has held rigidly to the original concept of the Civil Service Act and the open competitive examination system. In his 7 years as President Theodore Roosevelt blanketed in only 249.

Taft was next with 473 noncompetitive inclusions. Harding's total was slightly more, or 484, while Coolidge stepped up such inclusions by 8,399, or more than twice the number Hoover included, which was 3,799.

Franklin Roosevelt has included within the competitive civil service just twice as many by the blanket or noncompetitive route as have all other Presidents of this century with their total of 13,404.

If the Ramspeck bill is enacted, obviously the present administration will be recorded as having included, despite its early faltering, by far the greatest number of positions, as well as the greatest number of noncompetitive exclusions. The New Deal total, net, will be 405,600 accretions to the classified service, as against only 279,611 net increase under Wilson.

Thus will Franklin Roosevelt be hailed as the man responsible for the greatest increase in the strength of the classified service in the 58 years (by 1941) history of civil service by 126,000 more than included by Wilson, who adhered twice as closely to the competitive system than has Franklin Roosevelt.

As matters stand, the conservative Democrats and the Republicans maintain that the blanketing or noncompetitive route does not constitute the spirit of the open competitive examination. The consequence is they are opposed to Ramspeck's bill, which now has the steam under it, with orders for enactment.

The Ramspeck bill has amassed considerable further opposition because it is an omnibus bill and included a number of other provisions not connected with extension of the classified service. The consequence has been that instead of amassing advocates for the bill, a great wall of opposition has sprung up.

Table showing by years numbers added to the classified service since its inception and number included without formality of open competitive tests. Minus sign denotes decrease. Note that in some years more entered by blanket or noncompetitive route than the net number added to the classified service for the same year.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by Mr. Austin, Director of the Census Bureau.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial regarding legislation that I have introduced today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MRS. ROOSEVELT AND THE STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, in a copy of Life magazine which carries the date of February 5, I notice, on page 70, a map purporting to show the travels of the remarkable Mrs. Roosevelt for the past 7 years. The map indicates that the only State in the Union she has not visited is the State of South Dakota, and thereby libels my State by referring to it as "darkest America." Mr. Speaker, my State is known from coast to coast as "the sunshine State," and does not deserve the name of "darkest America." The brightness of its hospitality and the spirit of its patriotic people combine with its fertile fields and beautiful mountains to make South Dakota one of the country's cheeriest and happiest Commonwealths. It seems to me that Mrs. Roosevelt has either followed the well-known human tendency to save the best for the last or else she has been haunted by the memory that it was while Mrs. Coolidge was last visiting our State with her husband in 1927 that the then President Coolidge made his famous statement, "I do not choose to run for a third term." [Laughter and applause.]

In either event we invite Mrs. Roosevelt to visit South Dakota and bring her husband with her. The first lady of the land is entitled to see America's best, and if her husband also should say at that time, "I do not choose to run," I am sure the country will survive.

Long live South Dakota. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a recent statement I made before the Ways and Means Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE NORTHWEST TERRITORY

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting Mr. Sprunt's article in the Appendix of the RECORD. I have an estimate from the Public Printer that it will make three pages in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. ROBERTSON addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a short editorial from the Milwaukee Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from the Corn Industrial Foundation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein brief statements and resolutions and extracts from brief statements and resolutions in respect to the reciprocal trade agreement law administration from the California Farm Bureau Federation, the California Grange, the California Cattlemen's Association, the California Wool Growers' Association, the California Fig Institute, the California Oil Producers Association, the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, and other agricultural organizations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a short letter from Gifford Pinchot.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THOMAS A. EDISON

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. VREELAND addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a brief editorial appearing in the Palladium-Item of Richmond, Ind.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PROCEDURE IN THE HOUSE

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, a good farmer takes out on time. Desiring his field work well done, he stops before dark. To his sons he says, "Better finish tomorrow." This thought came to me last Friday night as it has at other long night sessions. Members were worn out. Nerves were on edge. Small wonder that occasionally there was a show of anger or disgust, or that there was jolly and horseplay. On the floor there was confusion, while in the galleries there must have been consternation.

With an important bill under consideration, a bill dealing directly with the weal or woe of millions of farmers and their families, visitors saw business transacted in a manner little short of burlesque. A village board or town council would have acquitted itself with much more credit. Such procedure is not fair to our constituents, not fair to ourselves, and should be stopped.

Death has claimed 23 Members of the present Congress, which convened but little more than a year ago. If considered only from the sordid dollar standpoint, this means a loss. Under the Constitution, a vacancy in the House cannot be filled by appointment, as in the Senate. So the death of a Representative means the expense of a special election, not to mention the cost and loss to the district in the training of a new Member.

At a cost of thousands of dollars annually medical care is provided Members while on duty, yet the House, in long and needless night sessions, followed by do-nothing legislative days, violates simple rules of health.

Last Friday night, near the end of the grueling session, my attention was attracted to one of the oldest, most faithful and most useful Members of this Congress. Worn out as he was, he had waited until completion of the bill, within an hour of midnight, then alone and clearly almost exhausted, left this Chamber. Only a few minutes earlier I sat by another Member, one who has demonstrated his ability as a trained athlete. Said he, "I am under 40, yet I am tired and worn out. My eyes ache. All of us must pay for such a night as this."

So, in the words of a highway sign I once saw and which impressed me as being exceedingly sensible, I ask, ask you and ask myself, "Honestly, now, what is your hurry?"

For the proceedings against which I protest I blame no individual. No one Representative is responsible for these long, health-wrecking sessions, but, determined and united, we can put an end to the wasteful system.

Better work a full week and take out on time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, In view of the fact that the gentleman has declined to yield for a question, I also ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute in order to ask what it is in our procedure he condemns so emphatically.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to have the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON], who has just spoken, tell us just what the particular action in connection with the agricultural appropriation bill it was that he objects to and who is responsible. As he spoke for only 1 minute and declined to yield I am a little uncertain as to the purpose of his speech. I hope he will be more explicit.

Mr. NELSON. I wish it clearly understood, and I had planned to do so had the time permitted, that I meant no reflection on any individual. It is a silly, indefensible system that has grown up in this House. We owe it to ourselves and to the country to see that it is stopped.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. What system is silly? I have never known the House to act silly. Our system of procedure has been developed through the experience of more than 150 years, and is conceded to be the most efficient used by any deliberative body in the world today. On the day to which the gentleman refers we followed approved procedure in every respect.

Mr. NELSON. The practice to which I refer is that of working here when everybody is worn out instead of waiting until the next day to transact the public business as it should be transacted. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. So far as night sessions are concerned, we have them in every Congress. In 30 years I have never known a Congress which did not work at night if there was work to do. In fact, on bills affecting labor or commerce or industry I have known them to stay in session all night.

The gentlemen who started trying to adjourn in the middle of the afternoon and continued it through the evening did not at any time suggest adjournment to the next day. They did not want to adjourn and continue on Saturday. They wanted to quit for the week and not take it up again until Monday or Tuesday. Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of talk about men on W. P. A. refusing to work and drawing their pay for leaning on their shovels. Perhaps it would be appropriate to add an item to the bill to buy shovels for some of the Members of Congress to lean on.

Mr. Speaker, let me say again, as I said in the discussion of that bill, every political party promised the farmer a fair price for his products and this Congress ratified that promise. Yet, the farmer is today getting less than 75 percent of parity. Every time the farmer takes his wheat, corn, hogs, poultry, cotton, eggs, milk, and other products to market, they take one-fourth of what he ought to get out of his pay check. The farmer pays more than parity for everything he buys and gets less than parity for everything he sells. And this sit-down-strike Congress is doing nothing about it. Congress has enacted legislation to boost the prices and wages of everybody but the farmer. I have cited that legislation repeatedly. All prices are going up except the farmers' prices. Farm prices are falling even though the world is at war. Hogs are down half. Wheat is down 12½ cents in 1 month. Eggs have fallen 6 cents since the first of February. And other farm prices in proportion. If our present farm program will not sustain farm prices during a great war, what will happen when the war ends? You know what happened to farm prices when the last war ended. The same thing will happen again unless this Congress passes a law to do for agriculture what it has already done for labor and industry. And every real friend of the farmer is ready to stay here any night and every night if the Committee on Agriculture will bring in a bill and permit us to work on it.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the Record and to include therein a short poem by George Sandford Holmes on the President's birthday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a radio address by Frank T. Bow on the subject, Undominated Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit two unanimous-consent requests:

First, to insert in the Appendix of the Record a letter from G. T. Lindsten, chairman of the Minnesota State legislative board, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and also a letter from A. F. Whitney, president of the Grand Lodge, Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, Cleveland, Ohio.

Second, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter and enclosure from Malcolm M. Willey, university dean and assistant to the president, University of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the requests will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a statement by W. B. Greeley, secretary-manager of the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, on the experience of west-coast lumber in foreign trade.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by inserting in the Appendix a statement by M. J. Vennewitz on the navigation of the Columbia River.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record on the subject of the St. Lawrence Seaway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE FEDERAL HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that we have order in the Chamber that we may hear the economist from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman from Mississippi to hear me.

Mr. Speaker, that we must exercise the greatest care in the laws we pass is vividly demonstrated by headlines appearing in a recent issue of the St. Louis Star-Times:

Manhasset Village to be sold at auction. Result of mortgage default. One million six hundred thousand-dollar loan on huge apartment project.

The particular point to which I wish to call attention by this article is that the Housing Act was so framed as to permit an individual purchasing land for $39,000 to turn around and sell it to Housing Authority for $171,000, making an initial and immediate profit of $132,000. Next he gets the building constructed, and the New York Life Insurance Co. take a mortgage for $1,600,000; the Government guarantees it through the F. H. A. Then and only then is it found out that of the 354 apartments in the building only one-third are being rented. It is not, therefore, a good or a paying proposition as many Government projects prove to be. We ought to be careful in framing our laws that we do not so frame them as to permit racketeers to profit at the expense of the Nation's taxpayers. I say that we have made more laws with loopholes in them the past 7 years than in any comparable period of our national history.

We were told when a law is made if it is not good or if it is not workable it would be changed. I must admit you are mightily slow in changing laws that should be amended or canceled all together. Let us get some real action in the change of the law setting up the F. H. A.; also the N. L. R. B. and many other recently enacted laws.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an announcement by the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that H. R. 1837, for the relief of Victoria Maghee, be taken from the omnibus bill, H. R. 6186, and returned to the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman submits a very unusual request, one which the Chair would like to examine into before the Chair puts the request. Will not the gentleman withdraw it for the time being?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an address by Hon. James A. Farley, Postmaster General of the United States, at the dedication of the new Federal building at Pensacola, Fla., on Tuesday, January 23, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD indicating the operations of the small-mine operators.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks, and to include therein a statement regarding the La Mont boilers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a copy of resolutions adopted by the Oklahoma Farmers' Emergency Association at their board meeting of January 8 and 9.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, February 19, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and the legislative program for the day, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

REREFERENCE OF BILLS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bills, H. R. 4533, to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation, and to amend the Social Security Act providing for the complete separation of the District Unemployment Compensation Board from the Social Security Board, and for other purposes; H. R. 5996, to amend the act of Congress approved May 3, 1935, entitled "An act to promote safety on the public highways of the District of Columbia by providing for the financial responsibility of owners and operators of motor vehicles for damages caused by motor vehicles on the public highways in the District of Columbia; to prescribe penalties for the violation of the provisions of this act, and for other purposes"; and H. R. 3950, to amend paragraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 6 of the District of Columbia Traffic Act, 1925, as amended by the acts of July 3, 1926, and February 27, 1931, and for other purposes, now pending on the Union Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia for further study.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter received by myself from the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. SCHWERT, may be allowed to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Palisadian, of Pacific Palisades, Calif., on Harry Bridges—I Pledge Allegiance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from South Carolina.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

THE AMERICAN FARMER

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, may I take this occasion to object to the illustration given by the gentleman from Missouri a little while ago when he mentioned about the farmer stating to his son, "It is 6 o'clock. Let us unhitch. There is a tomorrow."

The farmer does not say that. If there is a load in the field, he says, "Let us get that out tonight. It may rain tomorrow." [Applause.]

When we were considering the agricultural appropriation the other night, it was a good idea to finish its consideration, because it may have rained extravagance the next day. We are headed in the right direction. There will be another appropriation bill coming up for consideration shortly. Do not let them say to you, "We cannot reduce this bill." Do not let them say, "They took it out on agriculture only." Get busy on this one coming up, too, just as we did in connection with the agricultural bill, and let us follow through in the same way with all the rest of these appropriation bills. [Applause.]

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAWKS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the debate between the two gentlemen from Missouri. Last week, when we were arguing about staying here to complete consideration of the agricultural bill, I happened to look at the clock at the time the gentleman from Texas was having such a bitter discussion with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. It was exactly 6:30, and I could not help but think that was about the time that dad, mother, and the kids were just getting ready to grab hold of the milk pails and go out and do the milking back home in Wisconsin. They could not put that off because they were tired. They had to go out and take care of the cows. I hope we will proceed in the future as we did last week and take care of our work when it is before us.

I realize that there is a terrific volume of work pressed upon all Members of the House; but with the entire country looking toward Congress for relief from New Deal recklessness and wastefulness, it is our duty to do our work as it comes to us and accept our full responsibilities.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution adopted by the Minnesota State Farm Bureau Federation on the subject of trade agreements.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter I received from the president of the Twin Cities Milk Producers Association in regard to the same subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSEN]?

There was no objection.

STATE, COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND THE JUDICIARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1575), which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CARTER reserved all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by Hon. William N. Morell on the occasion of the celebration of the founding of the Supreme Court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

STATE, COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND THE JUDICIARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the judiciary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I can reach an understanding with the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] with regard to the amount of time to be allowed for general debate.

Mr. CARTER. I have had a number of requests for time and presume I shall have additional requests. I would suggest that we let the general debate run along until some time later in the afternoon, when we may know more definitely what the requests for time will be. Perhaps then we can agree on a time for closing general debate.

Mr. CALDWELL. I believe that will be entirely agreeable. Perhaps in an hour or two we can agree on some definite time for closing debate.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate may be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8319, with Mr. BEAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the purpose of making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the judiciary. The item for the judiciary is a separate item, pursuant to the act of the Congress passed at the last session, and appears as such in this bill for the first time. Formerly it appeared under the Department of Justice.

The over-all picture of this bill is that it is $2,285,000 less than the 1941 estimate. It is $3,443,000 under the 1940 Appropriation Act. The Department of State had its estimate reduced $679,000 under the estimate, the Department of Commerce $444,000 under the estimate, the Department of Justice $810,000 under the estimate, and the judiciary $352,000 below the estimate.

I am going to break this presentation into four parts and ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT] to discuss the Department of Justice, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] the Department of Commerce, and the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER] the judiciary. At this time I shall briefly present that portion of the bill which relates to the Department of State.

Before doing so I wish to say, on behalf of the committee, that we sincerely regret the temporary illness of our chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McANDREWS], and bespeak for him an early return to his duties. I believe I can say, without the slightest qualification, that under his chairmanship this bill has received the most meticulous consideration; that every item in it has been carefully searched; and that every item presented to you has the full approval of the committee.

As I said a moment ago, under the Department of State we have a reduction of $679,000. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars of that is taken from construction items.

Under the Division of Commercial Treaties and Agreements we reduced the estimate of the Budget from $225,000 to $175,000, the purpose of the reduction being to eliminate all funds designed or allotted for the purpose of making new reciprocal trade agreements. The $175,000 allowed is allowed solely for the purpose of policing the trade agreements which have been effected.

Under the new cultural relations program the committee has reduced the figure from $291,000, as approved by the Budget, to $155,000. Under this item we have eliminated several of the activities and have reduced a number of others in scope.

We have allowed about $73,000 in increases in salaries for the Department proper. Every position allowed has been carefully studied and justified.

We disallowed $12,000 under contingent expenses which had been recommended for the purpose of defraying traveling expenses for members of advisory committees. We also reduced that figure by a considerable sum which had been recommended for the mailing of films and projectors to American republics.

Under "Printing and binding" we eliminated all funds for the printing of cultural-relations pamphlets, but allowed continuing publications, such as the printing of books on foreign relations, the printing of treaties, and certain other documents.

The passport-agencies item was slightly reduced because of the anticipated reduction in applications for passports.

We allowed the full estimate of $25,000 for the collecting and editing of the official papers of Territories of the United States. There are now 17 volumes not published.

Under the item of "Salaries for Foreign Service officers" we make appropriation for 840 officers. This service, as you will recall, was by the reorganization order combined, taking over all the Foreign Service activities of the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture and placing them under the Department of State. You will be interested in noting in the hearings and in the reports that around $104,000 annually is to be saved by this consolidation.

In making this consolidation it is necessary to allow some increases for office and living-quarters allowance. Under the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture the Foreign Service officers were not allowed living-quarters allowances.

We increased the representation allowances by $10,000.

Under the Foreign Service retirement and disability fund we have allowed a $409,000 increase, as recommended by the Budget. This is made necessary by an actuarial reappraisal of that fund, and is absolutely essential to maintain its solvency. It was formerly thought sufficient for the Government to appropriate an amount equal to that deducted from the employees' salaries, but it is now found after the reappraisal that it will take about 45 years to bring that fund up to its anticipated and necessary status.

We reduced the Budget estimate by $15,000 on salaries of clerks, but have allowed an increase over the current year of about $50,000 to carry on a program of salary reclassification.

Under miscellaneous allowances, Foreign Service, we have increased the current appropriations by $6,000 for additional personnel and $15,000 for readjustment and reclassification of positions.

We eliminated a request for chauffeurs in connection with the program to purchase automobiles for ministers and ambassadors. The committee felt that this program might be deferred for the present.

We increased contingent expenses by $91,000. This is justified by the increased work in the foreign offices and is made necessary by the granting of additional allowances for expenses.

Under the Foreign Service Buildings Fund we reduced the estimate of $500,000 of appropriation and $250,000 of contract authority to $300,000 of appropriation and $100,000 of contract authorization. It was the committee's opinion that under the present status of affairs in Europe we ought not to engage in any further building program in Europe, but we did allow enough to carry on all construction now under way and make possible further construction on property now owned by the Federal Government. We did not allow a very large sum for acquiring additional property.

Under the heading "Contributions, quotas," and so forth, we reduced the estimate by about $19,000 directed at the expenses of our participation in quarterly meetings of the Governing Board of the International Labor Organization. Your attention is called to the fact that neither this committee nor the Congress has any discretion in the matter of these funds. So long as the Congress authorizes the participation by this country in foreign conventions, it is our duty from which we have no escape to appropriate the funds necessary for that purpose.

Under conventions for promotion of cultural relations we added $20,000 to care for two additional countries ratifying conventions for the exchange of professors and students.

We made little change in the International Boundary Commission—United States and Mexico, or in the International Boundary Commission—United States and Canada, save a cut of $50,000 in construction funds for the former.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

We made little change in the International Fisheries Commission item or the International Pacific Salmon Fisheries Commission.

I want to call the attention of the House to the report on the State Department and, particularly, to the report of the subcommittee that made a personal inspection of some of the foreign offices. This report is contained in the hearings. The information made available by this report is of worth, and if the recommendations are followed the services of the State Department will continue to be more and more efficient. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, there has been assigned to me the duty of discussing title II of this bill, and it might not be out of place for me to say that I think this subcommittee, as well as the whole committee, shares with the country the thought that the time has come when we must make our appropriations for Government activities less wherever possible.

The various activities of the Department of Commerce for the fiscal year 1939 required an appropriation of $47,000,000 plus. In 1940 the appropriation was $38,000,000 plus. This reduction was largely due to the transfer of the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Bureau of Fisheries and the Foreign Commerce Service to other administrative divisions. The estimated cost of the work transferred amounted to approximately $11,000,000 plus for the Bureau of Lighthouses,

$2,000,000 plus for the Bureau of Fisheries, and about $1,000,000 for the Foreign Commerce Service.

The total Budget estimate for 1941 for the Department of Commerce was $34,000,000 plus, $4,000,000 plus below the 1940 appropriations, and this committee has reduced the Budget estimate for 1941 by $443,930. I refer the Committee to page 29 of the hearings in respect to these reductions.

For the expenses of the Secretary's office and personnel we continued the appropriation of $175,000 to secure experts and specialists to study our trade relations and business activities, especially with South America and between the various States. The hearings on page 22 will disclose the necessity for this and the justification for it.

For this division in 1940 there was an appropriation for that fiscal year of $1,170,000, and this bill carries an item of $1,190,000, an increase of $20,000, but $45,000 below the Budget estimate. It will be noted we have disallowed $30,000 for training of personnel, which is discussed on page 36 of the hearings, but for printing and several other small items we have also increased the appropriation, which made a total increase of $20,000.

The Bureau of Domestic Commerce is still doing an immense amount of work for the Foreign Commerce Division by printing and disseminating business information. The committee has approved an item of $75,000 for the establishment of the regional area offices to coordinate the work of the 25 district offices throughout the country.

The total appropriation in this bill for this bureau is $2,150,000, which shows a reduction of $35,000 under the 1940 appropriation, which was $2,188,740.

It will be noted that we disallowed $19,000 for administrative promotions; and right here let me say we disallowed all items in this bill for administrative promotions and allowed an item of $75,000 for the establishment of these regional offices.

Justification for this and the evidence with respect to it appears on page 60 of the hearings. There is also an increase of $2,500 for traveling expenses, expenses which are incidental when representatives and employees of the Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce are required to go to business meetings held in various cities by the chambers of commerce and other business organizations. This Bureau of Domestic and Foreign Commerce is a fact-finding authority for our vast commerce and business operations, and involves inquiries which concern more than 6,000 business firms in the United States. This information is disseminated through trade-press publications and contacts with the Washington office and the substations.

Another division of this Department is the Census Bureau. It is estimated that the sum of $53,000,000 will be necessary to take the Sixteenth Decennial Census. Forty-five million dollars of this is for taking the census proper, involving the various questions and the collection of information concerning the increase of our population, unemployment, the census of agriculture, nurseries, florists, irrigation, drainage, business, mines, wealth, debt, taxation, marriage and divorce, vital statistics, and other matters, and the item of $8,000,000 for taking a housing census, which was authorized late in the last session of Congress. It will take probably over a period of 3½ years to complete this census. We appropriated $22,000,000 in 1940, and this bill carries an item of $18,000,000 for 1941, and $13,000,000, it is to be assumed, will be appropriated in 1942. Of this sum $8,000,000 is to be used for the acquisition of housing statistics, and it will be noted that the 1941 item is below the Budget estimate, notwithstanding the fact that we have included an item of $20,000 increase for extra work to secure and coordinate old-age and social-security statistics. In consequence of the social-security laws, the people throughout the country have to depend upon the Department of Commerce and the Census Bureau of that Department to acquaint them with many facts involving the eligibility of old people under this social-security legislation. A discussion of this will be found on pages 72 to 74 of the hearings, and it is most interesting. The First Census of the United States was taken in 1790, and since then the population has increased from 4,000,000 to 130,000,000. It took only 56 pages of standard book paper to publish the First Census, and the Fifteenth Decennial Census required 32 volumes, which contain more than 30,000 pages. The present Bureau of the Census was set up in 1902. Prior to that time the duty of taking the census was assigned at various times to different departments of the Government.

The next item under this appropriation is for the Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation. In 1940 we appropriated for this activity $2,670,000, and this bill carries an appropriation of $2,616,000, a decrease of $55,000, which is below the Budget estimate of 1941 to the amount of $80,000. Several minor changes have been made in this appropriation. An item has been placed in the bill for the reallocation of employees, and the committee seriously discussed the matter of allowing the Bureau an additional number of patrol boats. It appeared that this Bureau had only three patrol boats, and they were located on the Atlantic coast, and it will ultimately have to be given additional patrol boats to be distributed in the Gulf area and on the Pacific coast. This Division seems to be doing great service, and the Assistant Secretary when before us took great pride in asserting that only one life had been lost at sea since the Morro Castle disaster which could have been due to lack of proper vessel supervision.

This Bureau has in its employ 48 boards of local inspection and 14 shipping commissioners who cooperate with 60 collectors of customs. The Bureau has the responsibility of seeing that vessels are properly equipped, that proper assignments are made to ships, and it supervises the employment of seamen and passes on the safety of vessels.

The next item of appropriation is for the Bureau of Standards. The appropriation for this Bureau in 1940 was $2,310,000. This bill carries an appropriation for 1941 of $2,037,000, a decrease of $273,000. This is due largely to two items which were left out, and which are nonrecurring by reason of the discontinuance of building-material inspection, involving a reduction of $150,000 and for land-purchase items amounting to $100,000. Several increases are placed in the bill, one for the procurement of new tools, of $35,000, and for the procurement of facilities to test fuel and lubricating materials for the Army and Navy, and an item of $10,000 for pH investigations—pH investigations are for the purpose of determining the acidity of materials, as well as alkaline properties in other materials. It is said that this investigation affects probably estimated business activities amounting to $37,000,000. The Division was established in 1901 with a staff of 900 employees. The Bureau of Standards has the duty of testing every conceivable kind of machinery, electrical appliances, and materials which affect the development of our economic and social life.

We now come to the Bureau of Coast and Geodetic Survey. The importance assigned to this Bureau relate to a comprehensive program of providing land and tidal bench markers and surveys throughout the United States and Alaska. This work is most important as we are replottting all of our land surfaces and seacoast and bringing up to date this information, especially for our national defense, and this work is especially important in view of our recent aeronautical expansion. The appropriation made for this Division in 1940 was $3,125,000. The item for 1941 is $3,481,000, which is an increase of $356,000 over the 1940 appropriation, but a $75,000 reduction below the Budget estimate for 1941.

The shore line of the United States is 103,000 miles long. It is the duty of this Bureau to make magnetic and seismological observations and prepare nautical and aeronautical charts. This data is most useful and necessary in the construction of water power, flood control, highway construction, engineering, and boundary marking. This Department was set up in 1807 in Jefferson's administration.

We now come to the last division under the Department of Commerce, the Patent Office. The appropriation for this office in 1940 was $4,623,000 and the item for 1941 is $4,670,000, an increase of $47,000. This increase is reflected in an increase of $23,000 over the Budget estimate. If you will read the committee report in respect to this activity, you will be satisfied that this increase is fully justified. This is one office of the division of the Department of Commerce that pays into the Treasury a great deal more than the expense incident to the running of the Department. The Patent Office receives over 100,000 patent and trade-mark applications per year, and there are 67 divisions engaged in examining these applications. The personnel consists of about 690 examiners and a clerical and administrative force of 650. The Department has a Board of Patent Appeals, and from that Board of Patent Appeals you can go to the courts, or you can go to the courts over the Board of Patent Appeals. It has a corps of patent attorneys and a scientific library. In this library there is a copy of all the patents that have ever been issued in this world.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KERR. This division, as I said, is self-supporting, and since 1933, for the past 6 years, there has been a net profit made for the Government in the administration of the Patent Office of more than $135,000 annually. Prior to 1933 there were many years when there was a deficit in this Office ranging from $80,000 to $800,000. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT].

Mr. RABAUT. In coming before the Committee today I am reminded in a most special manner of the Grim Reaper's activity in the membership of the House of Representatives, for in years past it was the privilege of the House on the presentation of the appropriation bill for the three Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce to give ear to the explanation of its able chairman, the late Thomas S. McMillan, of South Carolina. He was my friend, and under him I was tutored in appropriation matters. Today truly he is missed in this body.

The lengthy hearings comprised in three volumes and covering the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce were begun on December 4 last with the statement of the Honorable Cordell Hull, the Secretary of State. For many long hours the committee has diligently applied itself to the problems of the departments under the chairmanship of Representative McANDREWS, of Illinois; Messrs. CALDWELL, of Florida; KERR, of North Carolina; HARE, of South Carolina; CARTER, of California; STEFAN, of Nebraska; and WHITE of Ohio. The subcommittee, in my opinion, performed an exemplary task. Other members of the committee will deal with the Departments of State and Commerce and the judiciary; it will be for me to present to the House the facts relative to the Department of Justice.

At this time I want to pay honor and respect to the clerk of our committee, Mr. Jack McFall, who is a real and tireless worker.

There is appropriated for this Department $42,391,000, and this is the amount the committee recommends for the activities of the Department of Justice. The amount exceeds the appropriation for 1940 in the sum of $1,961,640, but is under the Budget in the amount of $809,620. It is well that I explain at this time that there is an emergency "B" budget set-up for the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the sum of $2,488,000, which budget is new and was not in the appropriation for the present fiscal year. If this amount of $2,488,000 is taken into account, the present appropriation shows a reduction under the amount appropriated for 1940 of more than half a million dollars.

THE FEDERAL BUREAU OF INVESTIGATION

The appropriation for this Bureau is set up under three special headings: The first, the appropriation for regular activities embracing the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States; the second, special appropriations available only for kidnaping, extortion, and bank robbery; and the third, the "B" budget, or so-called emergency appropriation, embracing espionage, sabotage, and violations of the neutrality regulations, and set up as a special appropriation for the term of the national emergency as defined by the President. The term of this appropriation is to adjust itself to the period of the limited emergency. The total estimated amount for the three appropriations allowed by the Budget was $9,932,000. The amount approved by the committee is $9,910,000. As I mentioned before, the amount so approved, however, is in excess of the total appropriation for the current year in the sum of $2,610,000, but represents a decrease in the Budget estimate of $22,000.

The Director of this Bureau, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, gave much detailed information to the committee, and the testimony from him is contained in some 60 pages in the hearings.

In each of the past several years the committee have called attention to the tremendous increase year by year in the volume of work of all kinds carried on by the Bureau. It appears now that any hopes that we might have entertained of the work leveling off in such manner as to permit a stabilization or reduction in the appropriation were futile. The testimony submitted this year by the Director of the Bureau indicates that in every unit of the Bureau there is an increase in activity greater in proportion over the year 1938 than in 1938 over 1937. The case load carried by the agents of this Bureau is a typical example of this condition. On July 1, 1934, there were 15,020 investigative matters pending and the case load was 15.03 per agent. On December 1, 1939, there were 21,976 investigative matters pending and the case load per agent had increased to 19.05. The Director testifies that an agent should not carry more than 10 cases on an average if the work is to be done expeditiously and thoroughly. Even with the agents of the Bureau carrying this case load of 19 cases per agent, there still remain unassigned nearly 7,500 cases, that is, cases which have not even been turned over to investigative personnel for investigation. These unassigned cases include, among others, bank robberies, escaped Federal prisoners, theft from interstate shipments, extortion, and White Slave Traffic Act violations. Thus it appears that not alone has the number of cases assigned to agents been increasing, but likewise those that are unassigned are growing in numbers. The following table taken from the hearings is highly informative on this subject.

Status of investigative matters on July 1, 1934 to 1939, inclusive, and on Dec. 1, 1939

Date	Investigative matters pending	Investigative matters assigned	Investigative matters unassigned	Case load per agent
July 1, 1934	15,020	5,615	9,405	15.03
July 1, 1935	13,369	6,681	6,688	12.44
July 1, 1936	13,398	7,404	5,994	14.32
July 1, 1937	15,219	7,987	7,232	15.58
July 1, 1938	15,330	9,097	6,233	16.06
July 1, 1939	16,847	10,401	6,446	17.84
Dec. 1, 1939	21,976	14,528	7,448	19.05

With respect to the fingerprint work of the Bureau, the House might be interested to know that at the beginning of the present calendar year there were nearly 12,000,000 fingerprint cards on file as compared with less than 10,000,000 in the preceding year, or an increase of approximately 21 percent. In December of 1939 there were 186,000 fingerprints received as compared with 138,000 in December 1938, or an increase of 34 percent. Nearly 8,000 fugitives from justice were located in 1939 by means of these fingerprint cards. In 60 percent of the cases of fingerprint cards received, criminal identification is made. Starting with 600 civil identification prints in 1934, the Bureau now has on file over 1,500,000 of these prints. These cards are kept separately from the criminal fingerprint records and serve such valuable purposes, among others, as identifying amnesia victims and unidentified dead. As an indication of the growing interest of the public in the work of the Bureau, the committee were interested to note that in 1938 an average of 591 persons a day visited the Bureau. In 1939 this daily average figure increased to 948, or a total of approximately 275,000 individuals in the course of a year. One of the recent developments bringing about added burdens of work to the Department grows out of the submission by industrial plants of fingerprint records of all employees engaged in the manufacture of supplies and equipment under contract to the Army and Navy. In like manner many communities are requiring people applying for employment in domestic or hotel work, or as taxi drivers, etc., to be fingerprinted and their prints sent to the central office in Washington for check against the criminal-identification file. In 1939, 185,000 of such records, in round numbers, were received by the Bureau, which was an increase of 53 percent over the previous fiscal year. The committee, faced with such an abundance of evidence bearing on the increase in the work of the Bureau, does not feel that it has any choice save to approve the Budget estimate for all the additional personnel requested, limiting the reduction of $22,000 under the Budget to the automobile-purchase program.

BUREAU OF PRISONS

The committee is not in a happy frame of mind when it announces to this House that the trend in prison population is on the increase and it is estimated that 2,000 additional prisoners will be placed under the jurisdiction of the Department during 1941. This amounts to an increase of 11 percent. There is in the course of construction under a former program six new Federal institutions. They will be in operation during the next fiscal year. The existence of the new institutions and the increase in the prison load necessitates additional personnel in the Washington office to handle the many problems of prison administration. The increase approved is $23,000.

PENAL AND CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS

For all maintenance expenses of our penal and correctional institutions the figure estimated for the fiscal year of 1941 was $16,212,000. The amount recommended by the committee, however, is $15,780,000, a decrease under the Budget of $432,000. This figure compares very well and favorably with the appropriation for the present fiscal year of 1940 for this activity which is set forth in the sum of $15,878,600. This sum is $98,600 in excess of the amount recommended by the committee for the fiscal year 1941.

It is true that many increases occur throughout this entire appropriation because of the six new institutions that will be placed in operation for the entire fiscal year of 1941, but there is an offsetting decrease in the sum allowed for additional construction purposes.

PRISON CAMPS

The committee wishes to express itself to the House in its approval and encouragement in the use of prison camps. We deem them better from both a social and financial standpoint. The opportunity for healthful work and outside environment is afforded the inmates. They are less expensive to establish and less expensive to operate. The committee exhorts the Members to read the summary on prison camps in the report.

THE PROBATION SYSTEM

Probation system: An increase of $34,000 over the 1940 appropriation has been approved by the committee for the maintenance of the Federal probation system. This increase will sanction the appointment of 12 additional probation officers at $2,300 each, and 6 additional clerks at $1,440 each. An increase of $4,000 has been allowed for miscellaneous expenses incident to the employment of the additional personnel allowed.

At the present time there is an average case load of 160 cases per probation officer. Director Bennett indicates that in order to exercise the type of supervision of probation of parolees that is desired, an officer should not handle more than 50 cases. At the present time about 35 percent of all offenders of Federal law are being placed on probation. During the last year about 12,000 defendants were disposed of by placing them on probation rather than committing them to confinement in an institution. Not only has this policy resulted in a measurable saving to the Government, but a means has been afforded whereby efforts, some of which have been successful, have been made at rehabilitation of these offenders.

The appropriation for the probation system has been continued under the Department of Justice section of the bill rather than transferring it to the title dealing with the judiciary. This is done because the committee believe that the administration of the probation system will be more effectively promoted if it continues as a part of the Federal correctional system. Under the present law probation officers devote approximately half of their time to supervising parolees, conditional releasees, administration of the Federal Juvenile Delinquency Act, and other work which falls exclusively under the administrative authority of the Department of Justice. If these probation officers are transferred to the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, it is our belief that such a move will tend inevitably toward the establishment of a separate system of officers directly under the Department of Justice to supervise parolees and perform executive duties under the Department of Justice. If this should happen, a very considerable increase in cost would result to the Government, and at this time the committee is confident Congress would not care to add additional financial burdens of this nature, particularly when the work is being carried on satisfactorily at the present time. If, upon review of the question by the proper legislative committee of the House, action is taken by them and by Congress which definitely places the probation system under the Administrative Office of the Courts, the committee then will, of course, adjust its appropriations accordingly.

ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST AND KINDRED LAWS

The Antitrust Division, under the able Assistant Attorney General Arnold, was given considerable time before the committee and the convincing statement of the need for additional funds in order that pending cases may be disposed of and others might be instituted was very apparent. About 20 of the 50 antitrust cases pending at the present time are regarded as major or key cases, the settlement of which would effect a whole field of activity. I respectfully refer the Members of the House to Mr. Arnold's statement in the hearings. The committee recognizes the fact that a great sum of money could readily be used by this division, but at the same time there appears to be an infinite field for inquiry for antitrust activity. However, the call for strict economy again is heard, and the committee, in the spirit of encouraging the Antitrust Division in its commendable work, has seen fit to approve the sum of $1,250,000, an increase over the Budget estimate in the amount of $41,000. Were times normal, I am certain this Division would have greater recognition from a financial standpoint, in order that it may bring to justice all violators of the antitrust provisions. The only two increases above the Budget estimates in the entire bill are revenue-producing agencies, the one the Patent Office, the other the Antitrust Division. The committee has approved, therefore, the sum of $1,250,000, an increase over the Budget estimate of $41,000. I think the House will be interested in the expression of several newspapers about this work, which I submit as an extract from the committee hearings:

RESULTS OBTAINED

Mr. ARNOLD. One of my principal concerns last April was the fact that I believed it would require a full year before I could bring any results to you. I was then looking toward the conclusion of the various trials after indictments had been returned. I greatly feared that I would have to come back to this committee in January or February and say: "Gentlemen, I am working hard, but it takes time to organize and conduct an investigation into obscure business practices throughout this whole country. I have no results to bring to you now, but I do ask your patience and forbearance and urgently request that you give me an opportunity to complete the job." That was not a pleasant prospect. A man in public life in this country can last only so long on promises. Soon, and often too soon, he is called upon to produce results—results which may have been forced by the pressure of political circumstances. I had determined not to do this. I had determined to do the job right, taking my time in preparation and organization, if it meant that it was the last job I was privileged to do for the Government.

I must admit, therefore, to an element of surprise at being able to bring you any tangible results at this time. I expected I would have some indictments, but I had no reason to believe that the mere indictments alone would go so far toward puncturing the blockade of Nation-wide restraints.

I do not wish to exaggerate the effects of our work, nor do I wish to ask this subcommittee to reply upon my judgment alone as to the value of our accomplishments to date. I do feel, however, that I can properly ask you to consider the judgment of unbiased commentators who are in a position to decide for themselves whether we have met our promises.

I should like, therefore, to bring you our results in the words of others; words from newspapers in only those States represented by the members of this subcommittee. I might lead with a Scripps-Howard editorial entitled "Don't Drop This Great Work." It declared:

"There has already been a sharp drop in building cost, which had allegedly been kept up through collusion. * * * Sand and gravel prices have dropped from $2.45 to $1.65 a ton since the inquiry began. * * * We believe that the savings in Pittsburgh alone would be sufficient to pay the entire cost of the national investigation. Few efforts undertaken by the Federal Government promises such important results at such low cost * * *. We urge all Pennsylvania Senators and Representatives to make the appropriation of adequate funds for completing this investigation and prosecution * * *."

From California the Los Angeles Evening News said:

"Prospective builders of family dwellings have already suffered too long from unreasonable building cost."

The Los Angeles Times, in expressing a general approval of the drive, said that the program so far—"indicates that the Department of Justice is really going after the building-materials racket * * *. The actions so far taken are at least evidence of good faith."

From Florida the Miami Herald says:

"If we judge the Department accurately, it will do a thorough job of fact finding of all factors and phases investigated of the methods which have allegedly increased construction cost."

And again that same paper says:

"Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold * * * asked nothing of labor that would restrict its progress for the betterment of the working people * * *. The country as a whole and union labor in particular should approve his stand as doing labor a great favor and the country a marked service."

The Miami News said:

"It needed an administration so conspicuously friendly to labor and its collective bargaining to do the important job to which Thurman Arnold set his hand."

In Illinois the Chicago News says that "the public will heartily endorse this opinion of Mr. Arnold's." And the Chicago Journal of Commerce says "We wish him luck." The Rockford Star, in speaking of the Department's labor policy, said:

"We fail to see anything unfriendly or dangerous to union collective bargaining in the five Arnold points."

In Michigan the Detroit News, under an editorial entitled "Give Him the Money," speaks as follows:

"Since the Department of Justice began its operations against building-trades 'rackets' * * * it seems hundreds of cities are similarly afflicted * * *. Local authorities, for some reason, appear unable to cope with the evil, serious as it unquestionably is * * *. Mr. Arnold should be entrusted with the sum he asks and as much more as may be needed for the task he has embarked on. With the money, moreover, should go hearty official backing and the moral support of the public, for the organized interests resisting his operations are influential and active."

The Grand Rapids Press said:

"Restriction of any practice which tends to slow up building or make it more costly will be hailed by the building industry and the general public."

In North Carolina the Durham Herald-Sun says:

"There is general agreement that building costs are out of line with economic forces which control them, and there is a clamor that the Government do something to relieve the pressure."

In Ohio the Cleveland Press said:

"The Justice Department's investigation of high building cost is threatened with collapse because of the depletion of funds * * *. The benefits in any one of many large cities might easily be more than enough to pay the entire expense of a thorough national investigation. This activity of the Department of Justice should be extended, not curtailed. The next Congress should make additional and adequate appropriation for this purpose."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer, in expressing its approval of the whole drive, declared:

"A further Federal inquiry might be expected to uncover a good many things which would be sensational. We trust * * * that it (the Department of Justice) pulls no punches."

The Oxford Beacon-Journal declared:

"The Justice Department's inquiry into high costs in the building trades must not be permitted to die. * * * It has already brought great benefits. * * * Indeed, the healthier condition in a single city might equal the total cost to the Federal Government."

The Cincinnati Times-Star said:

"In the building industry it has been made almost impossible to build a home within the means of the average American, a situation which is not good either for him or for the industry."

The Cincinnati Enquirer declares:

"A clear-cut, even-handed policy of the kind enunciated by the Assistant Attorney General has been sorely needed."

The Columbus Dispatch said:

"If Mr. Arnold carries through the program as indicated in his statement, it will be a clear gain for the Nation."

In South Carolina the Columbia Record declared:

"If Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold can prevent this waste, he will be doing labor a service."

The Greenville News added:

"And Thurman Arnold is taking * * * a wholesome and sound position * * *."

Collier's magazine, in withdrawing some of the morose misgivings of a year ago, recently said:

"In his crusade against monopoly in the building industry, Mr. Arnold is playing no favorites that we can see among contractors, materials men, architects, and building-trades unions or union leaders who have been working together or separately to keep the building industry on the Fritz."

The American Farm Bureau Federation passed a resolution last month which said in part:

"We heartily commend and support the Department of Justice in their efforts to enforce the antitrust laws against unlawful restraints, illegal monopolies and practices, whether fostered by labor, industry, or agriculture."

These are only a fraction of the editorial comments which have been sent to me. I can also add without hesitation that there is practically unanimous approval of our building investigation.

SPECIAL ASSISTANTS TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

The Budget estimate made for the pay of special assistants was $650,000. The committee has reduced this amount in the sum of $75,000. The names of the persons employed under the appropriation, their annual compensation or Federal pay to each, and the description of their duty have been supplied in a report submitted in the hearings. The committee had a most serious discussion concerning this report and the services of some persons. In the report there is set forth the opinion of the committee:

As a general policy the committee is desirous that attorneys whose services are continuously required to carry on activities falling under any of the special divisions of the Department should be carried in such division's appropriations rather than under this head of special assistants. It is recommended that next year, under Budget authority, the Department cover into the various operating units of the Department such of these special assistants whose work falls under the head of any general division of the Department, thus permitting this appropriation to be confined exclusively to attorneys whose services are needed for a single, express purpose and whose employment can then be terminated after they have completed such particular duty. It is accordingly anticipated that a further substantial reduction can be made in this appropriation during the next fiscal year.

Another item the committee took up at length will be found on page 286 of the hearings. My statement to Mr. Bennett, the Director of Prisons, gives the gist of the matter. I said:

You remember that the committee discussed at some length last year the great difference in sentences for the same crime by judges in different parts of the country, and sometimes by judges in the same part of the country. These prisoners might be even in the same jail, having committed the same crime, under the same circumstances, with the same previous record, but with entirely different sentences.

I think I should say for the record, Mr. Bennett, that the discussion we have just had off the record relative to the gross disparity in certain sentences meted out by the courts is most informing and not a little disconcerting. While I realize that each Federal judge has his own conception of what constitutes justice in the individual case and that it would be humanly impossible to lay down an absolute standard of punishment that would be fair in its application to the varying set of facts and conditions existing in each individual case, nonetheless it would appear to me that the exercise of judicial discretion in some of the cases that are coming before our Federal judges is being applied within too great a range. As an example of what I mean, we find that in some judicial districts a large majority of all the cases coming before the judge are placed on probation, while in some other districts the judge refuses even to have a probation officer in the district and hence places no one on probation. With such a condition existing, it is not difficult to see how it would be possible for one of two individuals having committed the same crime with, we will say, substantially the same background and previous record to be placed on probation with the relative freedom that that entails, while the other culprit tried in another jurisdiction is incarcerated in a Federal institution possibly for a long term of years. It is simply not right or just, and I do hope that, now that the judiciary is set up with its own administrative body, that serious attention and study will be given to this matter with a view of at least correcting the glaring inconsistencies and abuses in the system.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. Did the hearings disclose how much money was being expended in building up conspiracy cases against people who had already been punished for the commission of some specific offense?

Mr. RABAUT. No.

Mr. WALTER. For example, take a violation of the liquor laws, where a number of men have been convicted and punished for a specific offense, I understand the Department of Justice has grouped those defendants together and is making a new charge of conspiracy against those people which, in effect, is punishing people twice for the commission of the same offense. I am just wondering how much of this appropriation is being used for that sort of thing, which I do not think is proper and right to do.

Mr. RABAUT. I am entirely in accord with the gentleman, but nothing was developed in the hearings on that point. I may say that only for 2 years after prohibition was there a falling off in the number of prohibition cases. Then it went right up again.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I notice on page 31 of the report, referring to the appropriation of $375,000 to meet the expenses involved in defense of suits growing out of various laws establishing Government insurance for veterans, it also refers to the number of cases pending during the current fiscal year as 1,663. Can the committee tell me the total amount that is involved in these cases?

Mr. RABAUT. I am not certain that it has been set up in the hearings, for there has been a general falling off in the number of cases, and for that reason the committee has seen fit to make some reductions.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I notice a reference to the appropriation made as some $700,000 in 1 previous year—the point that I want to bring out is, are we not spending a huge amount of money to prevent our veterans who went into our wars to preserve the Nation from getting justice?

Mr. RABAUT. No.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Evidently these are cases involving insurance that they feel is due them. In other words, we are spending $700,000 in 1 year to prevent them from getting what they think is due them. I have figured this out on the basis of 1,663 cases, $375,000 appropriation, and it makes $225.49 per case as attorney's fee for fighting these cases. Why would it not be better to spend the $375,000 for the benefit of the veterans instead of denying them justice?

Mr. RABAUT. The Veterans Insurance Litigation Division is convinced that that is as much in defense of the veterans as anything else. As a matter of fact, it was set up so that there would be no frauds perpetrated against the veterans or the Government either. Cases have been taken care of from time to time to the point where this is a lot of money for that Division, and we have made some recommendations about it to this individual department. And there is no thought on the part of the committee of doing anything unjust to the veterans.

As a matter of fact it is for the veterans' own protection. I can say that this is the unanimous ambition of the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Can the gentleman tell me why we are spending this $375,000 and how much is involved?

Mr. RABAUT. Does the gentleman wish to suggest that we cut it further?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I believe we could put it to better use on behalf of the veterans, from the information I gained through service on the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. RABAUT. The money would revert to the Federal Treasury in any event. It could not be used for any other purpose. So if the amount were reduced it would go back in the Treasury. This item is carried in this amount simply for the protection of the veterans. If the gentleman wishes to introduce an amendment recommending a cut, it probably would be entertained by the committee.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. In connection with the same subject, it does seem that this work ought to be finished unless Congress changes the law, for there have been no new cases and can be no new cases or new suits filed; yet this thing drags along. Why can they not settle these cases? Either a man is entitled to his insurance or not entitled to it. I fail to see why a group of lawyers could not liquidate these 1,300 cases in a year's time, pay them and get out.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. On page 31 of the committee report appears the following statement:

If the work of this unit continues to decrease from year to year as has been the case during the past 4 or 5 years, it is to be expected that other reductions will naturally follow in the funds provided for the activity.

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman will agree that a department once set up will hang on to enough cases to keep running for the next 15 years.

Mr. RABAUT. I am in full accord with the gentleman's statement.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question.

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think the committee has done a very admirable job on this appropriation bill and I feel that it is as good a bill as any that has been brought before us. It shows evidence of intense work and a desire on the part of the committee to serve the public. But in addition to the question raised about veterans I would like to ask the gentleman a question or two regarding the appropriations mentioned on page 37 of the report under the general heading of prisons, the subheading "Construction of buildings and facilities." Reference here is made to a request for $40,000 for a garage and shops at Sandstone, Minn. In the second column it shows the amount allowed as $12,500. In the other item under prison camps at the same institution it shows the estimate to be $46,000 and the amount allowed to be $40,000. I do not understand footnotes 6 and 7 appended there and I was wondering if that request is being cut down at that institution.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman should understand that all the work at these prisons is performed by the inmates. Whatever amount of money, therefore, is allowed is an amount for materials only.

Under prison camps the estimate submitted was $46,000 and the amount allowed by the committee $40,000. The amount $46,000 is the estimate proposed to the committee for all the prison camps, not for one institution. It should have been set out by itself. Had this been done it would have been more understandable. I do not blame the gentleman for noticing it. The amount allowed for it, as the gentleman will see, is $40,000.

The reason there is such a difference between the amount requested and the amount allowed, that is the small difference between these two sums shows how favorably the committee regards prison camps. They are much less expensive to create and operate. Furthermore they tend for the moral upbuilding of the prisoners.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that is a constructive move. Will the gentleman now tell us something about the item of $40,000 which was reduced to $25,000? Is that a request originally made by the prison authorities for $40,000 but reduced by the committee to $25,000?

Mr. RABAUT. This was put on a 2-year basis. Yes; it was a reduction made by the committee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The committee reduced it to $25,000. Why?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes. Twelve thousand five hundred dollars was allowed for this year.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I am pleased to yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. HARE. Going back to page 31, dealing with veterans' cases handled by the Department of Justice, it should be understood that the Department of Justice does not institute these proceedings and is not responsible for these cases being brought. The cases are filed by the Veterans' Administration and then the Department of Justice is asked to defend. The Department, therefore, has no discretion in the matter, as I understand. Am I correct?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes; and I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. To keep the RECORD straight, the 1,600 cases listed here have been on the dockets for years. There has not been any increase since 1927.

Mr. RABAUT. I think the gentleman will find that since 1931 there has been a decrease from 5,000 down to less than 1,600.

Mr. MILLER. A decrease?

Mr. RABAUT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. But they have been dragging along year after year at 1,600.

Mr. RABAUT. And there has not been a proportionate decrease in appropriations.

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. RABAUT. The decrease in the appropriation has not been proportionate to the decrease in the number of cases. That is why the committee has inserted this language in the report. We all look to a continued reduction in this activity.

Mr. MILLER. I read the questions which the gentleman asked in the hearings, and they are quite clear.

Mr. HARE. I find Mr. Martin testified, on page 344, that these suits were being brought and were increasing at the rate of 25 or 30 per month. I understand there is an increase in the number of suits brought. He said they were brought at the rate of 25 or 30 per month. So the decrease in suits is contingent upon some rule.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RABAUT. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to get this clear. It is my understanding that no new suits can be brought under any act. There is a bill now before the Congress to extend that act. I am not denying the answer given in the hearings, but I cannot see how they are increasing at the rate of 25 cases per month. Under what act are the suits being brought?

Mr. RABAUT. What page is that?

Mr. HARE. Three hundred and forty-four. That is the only thing we had to go on. We had to take Judge Martin's testimony.

Mr. MILLER. I read that, but I cannot find under what act they can bring these suits now.

Mr. RABAUT. I will find out.

Mr. MILLER. We will discuss it later.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriations in this bill have to do with the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce, also the Judiciary, which has heretofore been under the Department of Justice, but by the act of August 7, 1939, Public Law No. 299, was separated from the Department of Justice. We began hearings on this bill on the 4th day of last December and with the exception of a brief recess at the holiday season we have been meeting almost every day. Thorough hearings were held. My colleagues who have preceded me have covered the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce. Before entering into a general discussion of these appropriations I would like to say a few words about the office of the Administrator of the United States Courts which was created under Public Law 299 and for which the Congress of the United States is now appropriating for the first time.

This work is carried on by an Administrator under the terms of this act. The Administrator is appointed by the Chief Justice of the United States. Chief Justice Hughes appointed Mr. H. P. Chandler, an attorney of Chicago, as the first Administrator. Mr. Chandler appeared before our committee and requested certain appropriations. I had never met the gentleman before, but I was impressed by his sincerity and his enthusiasm for the new position.

Their budget this year will amount to approximately $233,000. The work of this administrative office falls into two main classes, one to provide for the material needs of the courts, furnishing them quarters in the way of buildings, rooms, supplies, stationery, library books, and providing for the payment of the compensation and expenses allowable by law for the judges, clerks, and other judicial officers and members of the staff of the judges, procuring and administering the annual budget of the courts, keeping and auditing the accounts of the courts. Of course, this is all new work. Mr. Chandler is getting a staff together gradually and expects to be functioning in nearly full force by the beginning of the next fiscal year, beginning the 1st of July.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the distinguished and efficient gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I return the compliment and yield to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. This long-needed reform is justified by reason of the fact that the judicial branch of the Government is separate and distinct from the legislative and executive branches, but will the gentleman tell us whether or not the work that has been taken over by the administrator, to which he referred a few minutes ago, and in connection with which he mentioned auditing, accounting, and so forth, is reflected in a reduction in the appropriation for the Department of Justice, which formerly performed these duties and is no longer required to do so?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. In making each and every appropriation for this new department the committee kept steadfastly in mind there should be a corresponding reduction in the Department of Justice, whether it was for auditors or other people. This work of auditing, of course, has been carried on by the Department of Justice.

Mr. COCHRAN. Did the gentleman's committee keep that in mind, and did it actually make a reduction in the Department of Justice, or does it provide for those employees to be used for other purposes?

Mr. CARTER. May I say to the gentleman from Missouri that certain reductions were made. They were not always to as great an extent as I personally desired, but I labored as best I could with my colleagues in making these reductions. Some reductions were made. I may say to the gentleman that the total appropriation for the Department of Justice is greater this year than it was last year by nearly $2,000,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is due solely to the increase for the Bureau of Investigation?

Mr. CARTER. It is caused principally by the increase for the Bureau of Investigation, but there were other increases also.

Mr. COCHRAN. Was not the committee justified in recommending that the employees in the Department of Justice who had been taking care of the duties the Administrator now performs, should either be transferred to the office of the Administrator or their positions declared vacant?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; I think that is a justifiable attitude.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CALDWELL. As a matter of fact, if it were not for the $2,000,000 item set up for the Bureau of Investigation, the budget for the Department of Justice this year would be less than for last year?

Mr. CARTER. I think that is true.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then on the whole, if it were not for the emergency conditions which necessitated the increase for the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Department of Justice appropriation would have been less than last year?

Mr. CARTER. I think I am correct in saying that the other items in the Department of Justice were not increased with the exception of one. There was an increase for the Anti-Trust Division, and, as I recall, that was an increase of $41,000. I may say to my friend from Missouri, who is always endeavoring to see that the Treasury is not raided, and I commend him for his attitude, that had it not been for the increase allowed the Federal Bureau of Investigation there would have been some reduction in the Department of Justice.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman place in his remarks some information about where the decreases were made, where the employees were eliminated who formerly performed the work that is now being done by the Administrator?

Mr. CARTER. The report shows that information.

Mr. COCHRAN. Why not quote from the report, then, and let the RECORD show that the reductions have actually been made.

Mr. CARTER. I will yield the gentleman time to make a speech and place that in the RECORD in his own remarks, if he so desires.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Did the gentleman find any evidence of the Bureau of Investigation's being used for political purposes?

Mr. CARTER. I recall no evidence of the Bureau of Investigation's being used for political purposes. There was some talk before the committee that perhaps the Bureau of Investigation was going into communities and doing police work which might well be done by the local authorities.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. By the States?

Mr. CARTER. By the municipalities and the States. But as far as political activity is concerned, I do not believe there was one statement of any kind before the committee in reference to that.

I have digressed here somewhat from the duties of the Administrator of the United States Courts. I have stated one class of duties. I desire at this time to state another, and in stating this other class I will read from the testimony of Mr. Chandler before the committee, as follows:

The office will have the responsibility of determining the forms of the reports of the clerks in reference to the work of the courts. It is also expected that the office will supplement the information gained from the reports by observing the actual work of the courts in the field by sending representatives of the office to the circuits or districts in which there seems to be unusual delay in the disposition of the work, where there is unusual congestion, or where complaints come from members of the bar and others. It is an important function of the office to try to bring about over a period of time greater expedition and efficiency in the dispatch of the judicial business.

Of course, it is not the duty of this newly created group to inquire into the correctness of the decisions of the court. They are not to be interfered with in any way. The judge will be just as free in the future to render his decisions according to the evidence and the law as he has been in the past.

This new office was set up by act of Congress. It is just getting under way. We are all hopeful that it will work out in a very beneficial manner.

Let me say in regard to these appropriations generally that all of them are below the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget. The bill we brought in here today for the Departments of State, Commerce, Justice, and for the judiciary is $2,285,000 below the Budget estimate and is also below the appropriations for these Departments for last year by $3,442,859.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McANDREWS] is chairman of this subcommittee. I desire to express my personal appreciation to him for the very fair, impartial, and nonpartisan manner in which he conducted these hearings, and that goes for each and every member of the subcommittee. There was no trace of politics or partisanship in our hearings. The minority members were given every possible consideration by the majority members. There is only one criticism I would want to make of the majority members of the committee, and that is that they did not follow me a little further in making cuts in these appropriations.

I want to say that I think we did very well. There are some items in here, however, that I would like to have cut even lower than they have been, but I appreciate that no one man on this committee can have his way, and inasmuch as substantial cuts were made I feel that the bill is not excessively high. There are one or two spots in it where I may offer amendments to reduce the amounts that are in the bill at the present time.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. May I point out to the gentleman from California, who is one of our distinguished statesmen, that an opportunity will occur to cut out $225,000 under the State Department appropriation, in the item provided for salaries in connection with the reciprocal-trade agreements. This is the first appropriation, on page 2, line 8.

Mr. CARTER. I may say to the gentleman that this bill as originally presented from the State Department provided funds for carrying on the reciprocal trade agreement work during the next fiscal year, but that was all cut out except as to the work necessary to be carried on in connection with the treaties that have already been entered into.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Is it necessary to police the agreements that have already been made?

Mr. CARTER. According to the statements of the State Department, it is necessary to have a certain personnel for policing or carrying on work in connection with the agreements. That is what this amount is for. It is not for anything else. We have cut out everything else they asked for.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman mean we have to maintain a police force to see that these foreigners live up to their part of the trade agreement?

Mr. CARTER. There are certain things that must be done; yes. According to the testimony of the State Department, there are certain things that must be done in connection with these reciprocal-trade agreements that have already been entered into. The funds provided in this bill they represented were necessary for carrying out that work. It is not in anticipation of reciprocal-trade agreements that may be entered into after the 19th day of next June.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What can they do about it down here if the foreigners do not live up to their agreements and give us the concessions they have agreed to? Can they arrest them?

Mr. CARTER. Not under international law, no; of course, they do not arrest them. For an answer to that question I refer the gentleman to the State Department.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I am very much interested in what the gentleman, who is rendering such a fine account for the committee, has to say with respect to cutting out the appropriation for the continuation of the work of the trade-agreement program. I am interested to know in that respect whether or not the Committee on Appropriations expressed serious doubt among themselves as to the possibility of the continuation of this program, in which we are all tremendously interested.

Mr. CARTER. Well, the gentleman serves on committees and he knows that what takes place in the Committee on Appropriations is in executive session, and he certainly would not want me to violate any confidence, but I can tell the gentleman how I personally feel about it.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I would like to know how the gentleman feels about it.

Mr. CARTER. I never voted for the bill that gave the President the authority to enter into these reciprocal-trade agreements in the first place, and I do not propose to vote to extend that authority either, when the time comes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I am pleased to hear the gentleman say that.

Mr. CARTER. One item in this bill that I cannot be enthusiastic about and, in fact, that I opposed and that I shall move to modify at the proper time is found on page 62. I do not know whether a point of order will lie against this paragraph or not, but I would like to ask the Chairman if I could not make a point of order against that when the time comes. It has to do with special attorneys.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COCHRAN). A point of order will not be sustained, as it is authorized by law.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to ask the Chairman what statute it is that sustains the appointment of these special attorneys. Does the Chairman contend that the Attorney General can go out here and appoint a thousand of these special attorneys for $100,000 a year, if he desires? Does the law permit him to do that?

The CHAIRMAN. When the gentleman makes the point of order the present occupant of the chair will have the proper reference before him. I advise the distinguished gentleman to save his energy and conserve the time of the House.

Mr. CARTER. I thought the Chairman was informed on all of these matters. [Laughter.]

However, the situation with reference to special attorneys is something that is somewhat serious. We have set up here, as you will see on page 62, $575,000 for special attorneys. Mr. Chairman, this is not for paying the salaries of the regular staff of the Attorney General's office. This is for the salaries of a group of men over and above that amount. I think that amount is decidedly excessive, and I think it should be reduced. In the committee I endeavored to cut the amount in half. It was reduced $75,000, but still I do not believe that that reduction is substantial enough.

I do not want to be considered as a penurious member of any committee. I like to go along with my colleagues, but when I see these various bureaus and departments coming and asking for more and more money each succeeding year, requesting greater personnel, and when I recall that we are borrowing nearly 50 cents out of every dollar for the salaries of this additional personnel and for the expenses of this additional work, it makes me hesitate to vote for such appropriations.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

We have cut this bill somewhat, and I may say here and now that, in my humble opinion, next year there must be far greater reductions, not only in this bill but in all the expenses of the Government, if the Government is going to go on and pay off the debt that it is accumulating. A step of this kind is most necessary and essential. [Applause.]

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. HARE. Referring to the criticism of the appropriation of $575,000 for special attorneys, I can see some ground for my colleague's position on that, but there is a little consolation in the latter part of the paragraph where it is provided that a report on the appointment of these men must be submitted to the Congress on the 1st of July and the 1st of January of each year.

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. HARE. So if, in our judgment and wisdom, we think these men are not properly appointed or that they are not discharging services for value, we can very readily pass a resolution and prevent further action.

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the gentleman that this is notice from the Congress of the United States to the Department of Justice that they must show that these people are absolutely necessary and essential, or we are going to cut them out, and we ought to do that very thing.

Mr. HARE. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. I thank you very much. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SCHULTE].

THE HEALTH OF THE PEOPLE OF AMERICA MUST BE PROTECTED

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Chairman, at no time in American history has the question of public health been given as much attention as it is today. This is the result of the fact that in the past few years America has become conscious of the fact that although it is the greatest country in the world it has failed to adequately meet the normal demands for adequate and efficient sewage-disposal facilities and the abatement of pollution in the Nation's lakes and streams.

In our march of progress, communities in every section of the country paid more or less attention to the problem of sewage disposal, and much of this progress, especially in the early days of the communities, came only after serious epidemics of typhoid, malaria, and other fevers. Too little attention was given to the methods of sewage disposal and little or no concern was given to the possible future growth. In the latter part of the last century, the sanitary engineer came into the picture, but we all know that for years he fought his battles single-handed. The policy of "what you don't see, won't hurt you" held sway in too many of our large cities.

When the question of sewage disposal reached alarming proportions it was turned indiscriminately into rivers, lakes—and yes, even oceans—raw and untreated. No thought was given to downstream towns, recreational activities, such as bathing, fishing, and so forth. Whole valleys came under the sinister influence and disastrous results of stream pollution. Only through bitter experience did men evolve scientific sewage disposal, and today, enlightened as we are, there is a sad neglect of proper sewage disposal in many sections of the country. Records show that the sewage from 35,000,000 people, representing 47 percent of the urban population of the country, is discharged untreated into water bodies. This today amounts to an estimated figure of two and one-half billion gallons of untreated sewage per day. In addition there is some 2,300,000 tons of sulphuric acid discharged annually from abandoned and active coal mines. According to the United States Corps of Engineers, annual losses from acid pollution in the Pittsburgh, Pa., district, an area of exceptionally acute waste problems, amounted to at least $8,000,000 as late as 1925. Damages from such disposal are more serious in the Nation's vital manufacturing belt, which extends from the Atlantic seaboard from Boston and Washington westward to Chicago and St. Louis. This is a center of population and industry. Fully 75 percent of the waste-disposal problem lies within this area and a few outlying areas on the Plains and the Pacific coast.

According to an inventory of sewage-disposal facilities in the United States in 1938, no section of the country has more than 70 percent of its urban population served by sewage-treatment works.

Following the World War there was a Nation-wide renaissance in the construction of sanitary sewer systems and sewage-disposal plants, but this progress, unfortunately, was arrested in 1929 and 1930, the beginning years of the depression. However, with the growth of population and the ever-widening urban limits of the cities, the increasing need for sewage-disposal facilities went unabated.

When the Public Works Administration was created in 1933 and its offer of assistance in the construction of necessary public works was made known, applications poured into Washington from every section of every State of the Union for P. W. A. aid in enlarging existing or constructing new sewage-disposal facilities. President Roosevelt expressed his desire at the start that this type of application be given immediate consideration. To date the Public Works Administration has received, altogether, for all types of public works, some 38,000 applications, nearly 6,000 of which have been for sewage-disposal facilities, and from 1933 to date P. W. A. has allotted funds for 1,525 sewer-system projects, including disposal plants, having an estimated construction cost of $467,950,000. These were what are known as non-Federal projects, constructed by cities, counties, and States, who contributed the major share of the construction cost. In addition to these, through P. W. A. allotments 98 sewer systems were constructed by Federal agencies.

It is gratifying to note that a large percentage of these safeguards to public health have been in small communities throughout the Nation which heretofore have been without this type of public utility. As a result of the P. W. A. sewer-construction portion of this program, the percentage of population served by adequate sewage-disposal facilities has been raised from 35 percent to 54 percent. Many towns have been provided with complete sewage systems and others have had existing collecting systems extended, and outgrown or insufficient treatment plants have been improved or replaced.

Through P. W. A. construction of sewage-disposal facilities and stream-pollution abatement in large metropolitan centers, great numbers of small communities have been immeasurably benefited. This is particularly true of the Connecticut, Potomac, Ohio, Mississippi, and Missouri River valleys, but the job is far from complete. Indicative of the existing demand for more projects of this type is the fact that when P. W. A. returned to public bodies on September 6, 1939, 5,043 applications because of the lack of additional funds—209 were for sewage-disposal projects having an estimated construction cost of $132,285,000. This shows how the municipal mind of America is thinking today in terms of public health.

The Public Works Administration has shown through its splendid record of 6½ years its ability and efficiency as a construction agency, and this agency should be continued on either a loan basis or on a loan-and-grant basis, so that it can continue to serve communities throughout the length and breadth of the Nation. The question has been brought up many times that because of public-works construction many cities are going further into debt. I say that if the addition of important public works affecting the health of the community means going into debt, it is a wise investment. I would much rather see a community go into debt in order to take care of the health of its people by constructing hospitals, waterworks, and sewage disposal plants rather than for the construction of bridges, viaducts, city halls, recreational buildings, and other useful but not vitally necessary public works. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield now 15 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take the floor on this bill, feeling that much of what I may have to say has been touched upon by other speakers and is covered in the hearings, which I recommend every Member read.

However, I feel this is an opportune time to pay some tribute to the memory of our late chairman and colleague, the Honorable Thomas McMillan, who was on the floor with this bill a year ago and who had charge of steering it through the House. Thomas McMillan was loved and respected by everyone who knew him, and we of the subcommittee of which he was chairman feel a personal loss in his passing. I know that I voice the sentiment of every member of our committee when I say that Mr. McMillan's absence has been felt in all of our deliberations on this important bill; that the service he rendered to this House and to this Nation was of great value, and I know that every one of us feels that his district, his State, and our entire Nation has suffered a distinct loss. The hearings disclose Mr. McMillan's service to this House up to the last hours of his life.

The bill which we bring to you is one of the most important bills you will get; one that makes annual appropriations for three of the great Departments of our Government—State, Justice, and Commerce. The hearings come to you in three volumes, which will indicate to you—if you take the time to read them—that your committee spent many hours and gave an unusual amount of consideration to every item before finally handing its findings over to you for final action. Your committee has worked on this bill since December 4 last. Its investigations went even into the foreign field in order to bring to you a measure which was thoroughly scrutinized. All of this in the hope that better light may be shed on these important appropriation items. Although we bring you an appropriation bill which is cut several million dollars under the Budget estimates, we feel that the decrease was made after the most careful consideration and will in no way cripple the regular functions of the departments affected by the reductions. The total carried in this bill is over $107,000,000. I wish to tell Members of this House of my respect for the work of my colleagues on this committee. Especially I wish to tell you of the close cooperation of every Member and the high esteem in which we hold our new chairman and the Honorable JAMES McANDREWS, the gentleman from Illinois. Every member of this subcommittee had an individual part in the difficult task in bringing this completed bill before you. Among these members are the Honorable LOUIS RABAUT, of Michigan; the Honorable MILLARD F. CALDWELL, of Florida; the Honorable JOHN H. KERR, of North Carolina; the Honorable BUTLER B. HARE, of South Carolina; the Honorable ALBERT CARTER, of California; and the Honorable DUDLEY WHITE, of Ohio. Especially I wish to commend the efficient and high-type service rendered to the committee by Mr. Jack McFall, the committee clerk.

I have been asked to say something about the inspection tour of your committee during last summer of our foreign missions. That item is covered thoroughly in the hearings in two reports. But briefly, you should know that this was the first time in our history that a majority of the subcommittee which makes these State Department appropriations visited Europe and made a personal study of our Foreign Service. These members were also members of the American delegation to the Interparliamentary Union, which met in Oslo, Norway, last August. Because they were in Europe anyway, this House decided that we make these investigations which, in my personal opinion, resulted in an unusual amount of good to both the Service and to Congress. These results, I feel sure, are reflected in the present bill and will be reflected in future appropriation bills.

I wish in these brief remarks to limit myself to some statements regarding the State Department and Foreign Service, and, time permitting, I may discuss some of the items in the Justice and Commerce Departments when those items come before us under the 5-minute rule when we start reading the bill.

I have always felt that our Foreign Service is our first line of defense, and while I have differed on the expenditures for some of the items you will find in the bill, I wish to assure you that it has been my experience while working on these money bills that the State Department is one branch of our service which has come before us with justifications which are unusually conservative. If I have any criticism to make now, it would be that in some items the Department is too conservative in its requests for funds.

A brief word regarding our building program in Europe should be inserted here. You know the map of Europe has changed and is changing. That results in many changes and shifts in our Foreign Service. You should know that our State Department is continually faced with serious questions as these changes occur. You should know that there are many consolidations being made which result in some economy. The Department should be highly complimented for some of the great work which has been accomplished. I cannot let this opportunity go without paying a high compliment to one of our Foreign Service officers who is among that army of your foreign servants of whom you very seldom hear about. This man is Mr. Geist, who has served a long time in our Berlin office and under whose direction our building there was reconstructed. Because of his knowledge of economic conditions in Germany, and because of his zeal, aggressive work, and initiative, we have one of the finest buildings in Europe located in the best location in the German capital. This building, under Mr. Geist's direction, was reconstructed so that it now houses all of our activities in Berlin which were formerly housed in several buildings. It will take care of all our activities there for years to come. The fact is that through Mr. Geist's activities, many thousands of dollars were saved for our Treasury through this unusual reconstruction work. I am happy to learn of his assignment to the office of the State Department here because of his unusual knowledge of affairs in Europe.

I have been asked if we have eliminated funds for our embassy in Moscow. We did not and there was no justification for so doing. There is no specific item for any one particular mission in this bill, but the numerous items which are scattered throughout the bill affect practically all of our missions, including Moscow. Personally I feel it would be a mistake to limit these funds so that none of them could be used for our mission in Russia. In these troublesome days we need more eyes and more ears in our Foreign Service. To eliminate an ambassador or minister now would be a grave error. I agree with the philosophy of some Members that we made a grave mistake in withdrawing our ambassador to Germany. We should have had an ambassador in Berlin all of this time. I say this without casting any reflection on the ability, efficiency, and the high character of our Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. J. Alexander Kirk, who is now in charge of the Berlin office. No other man, in my own opinion, could be doing a better job in Germany than this highly qualified diplomat. However, I feel he would be far better equipped to serve us if he had the title of ambassador.

I wish to take this opportunity to protest against misrepresentations which have been made regarding our colleague, the gentleman from New York, the Honorable HAMILTON FISH, who conducted himself so ably as the president of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union Conference in Oslo, Norway. I feel he was made the target for persecution because he took the lead in his fight to keep this country out of war. These misrepresentations appeared in the foreign and domestic press. I believe that if our colleague had gone to Europe and taken sides, instead of trying to remain neutral, he would have come home a hero. Because he continually made it known that the United States would keep out of all foreign wars and that we would remain neutral, and because he individually endeavored to urge the foreign powers to sit around some conference table and talk peace or declare a truce for a few months, he became the target for an unneutral press. Before attending the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union, he took his own time to visit Ireland, France, England, and Germany. I met him personally in Germany, and I personally know that what he had to say, and what he did, he said and did as a private individual, and in no way bound any other delegate to the conference.

Those of us who had the opportunity to study conditions on the Continent some weeks before the opening of the Interparliamentary Union Conference already knew that the war plans of Europe had progressed too far. Troops were already on the march. Our colleague, in his zeal to take some individual part in stopping what he had previously learned would result in the murder of thousands of human beings, became the target for the verbal bullets of war-mad Europeans. No matter what any of you think of our colleague personally, whether you believe in his progressiveness or his politics, I, for one, wish to stand by his side to do whatever I can to keep this country out of another foreign war.

I will not take more of your time now, but before I conclude I cannot refrain, Mr. Chairman, from telling you of my high admiration and expressing my appreciation for the excellent work that is being accomplished by our Foreign Service.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEFAN. Certainly.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. How many buildings are owned by this Government in foreign countries?

Mr. STEFAN. The gentlewoman will find that information in the hearings. I cannot tell her accurately, without consulting the hearings, and I advise her to read them. The information is available. We own considerable. We are endeavoring to consolidate much of the work. For instance, in Prague, Bohemia, we own a castle of many rooms. We occupy only a few of them, and we do not know now whether we shall sell that castle or remodel it. To sell it now would mean financial loss. Perhaps Czechoslovakia may some day be a republic again and we may have an ambassador there.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I sincerely hope so.

Mr. STEFAN. We are hoping so. The Berlin building to which I referred is located in the best part of Berlin, almost next door to the German Chancellery, and next door to Herr Goering's home. The building faces the famous street of Berlin, Unter der Linden. The work on that building was an outstanding piece of economy.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand also that the men who comprise our foreign personnel are men of very high caliber and are doing a splendid work.

Mr. STEFAN. The Foreign Service officers of the United States rank very high all over Europe.

I believe they are held in the highest of respect by the foreign-service officers of other nations. There are some weak points in the employment of some of our employees, but that is being gradually eliminated. You can be proud of the work being done by a majority of your Foreign Service officers today. There is a great difference as compared with some years ago. I hope that some day politics will be entirely eliminated in the selection of people whom we send to foreign countries to represent us.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Of course, many of these Foreign Service officers are on the firing line practically as are the men in our Army.

Mr. STEFAN. In my opinion, they are worth more to you and me than is our Army and Navy. They are our first line of defense. We must have those eyes and ears in the Foreign Service today.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TENEROWICZ].

THE POLISH EMERGENCY

Mr. TENEROWICZ. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairman of the subcommittee for permitting me to address the House at this time. I want to speak on the Polish emergency.

Mr. Chairman, it is my intention at this time to convey an interpretative picture of what has happened in Poland in the 4½ months since the September "blitzkrieg" ended.

As one of the people's Representatives in this Congress who happens to be of pure Polish lineage and European birth and who speaks and writes the native language, a great portion of my time since the destruction of Poland began last fall has been spent trying to assist American Poles in getting news of relatives and friends back in the "old country."

Hundreds of letters pour into my office each week, anxious and heart-rending appeals for any scrap of information that I can secure, any kind of news that will bolster fading hopes and relieve mounting fears.

Our efficient and zealous State Department has been most helpful. But here they are confronted with the most colossal overturn of population in modern history, and the Nazi censorship has been brutally airtight. Hence, while it has been almost impossible for me to secure definite information about individuals, I have, through my constant searchings, assembled what I consider a fairly accurate composite picture of this great historical debacle.

In mentioning these things at the outset, I wish to convey the assurance that, to the best of my ability, I have attempted to sift out apparent fiction, have tried not to be swayed by hysterical propaganda.

I have been conscientious about this, because when I appear here today, gentlemen, I feel that I am doing so on behalf of millions of American Poles who are now deeply disturbed over conditions in the fatherland.

And I wish to assert here and now that when I speak on a subject so near and dear to me as Poland and attempt to do so objectively, with neither passion nor emotion, I face a task that will not prove altogether easy.

To present the picture—an honest picture, if you please—I have culled through hundreds of letters, in English, Polish, and German; I have followed as closely as possible all authoritative appraisals that have been published here and in Europe; I have utilized information filtering through the Polish Embassy here in Washington and I have interviewed several officials of neutral countries who have been on the scene and were able to provide me with their purely detached and scientific accounts of the Nazi carnage and its continuing aftermath.

And the sum total of all these hundreds of viewpoints—after discounting by 50 percent all the atrocity stories I have heard and read in the papers—is that the plight of Poland today is pathetic and tragic almost beyond belief. Poland, which four times before in 1772, 1792, 1795, and 1814, has risen from the shambles and wreckage of partitions, is now undergoing the fifth and most brutal partition of them all. It is prostrate and facing annihilation. Of this I am soberly and conscientiously certain.

And I am equally certain that unless aid is brought to her at once, Poland's cross of misery may be too heavy to carry by the end of this coming spring. She must now—at this immediate time—be brought to know in some definite, tangible way that the sympathies of all America are with her. She must be heartened and encouraged and administered to—now—when her powers of resistance seem at lowest level.

Today, Poland is "black-out" from the rest of civilization. Never in modern times has so stringent a quarantine, so rigid a censorship, fenced off any single European country from the rest of the world.

Not since Hitler's "victory" parade in Warsaw last September have any American newspapermen or other neutral journalists been allowed to penetrate this fence and enter the country.

There have been almost no exceptions. It was only last Wednesday that the American Red Cross representative, James T. Nicholson, was permitted to leave Berlin for Cracow, there to supervise the distribution of supplies.

The high wall of censorship is up because the invaders do not want discerning eyes to view the monstrous crime that is being perpetrated behind that barrier. The oppressors are working against time while they shuffle great hordes of people across the map of northeastern Europe—resettling Balts in the prosperous sections of West Poland and driving the Poles out of these sections into the interior. Hundreds of thousands of people are the pawns in this colossal transfer of populations. And hundreds of thousands of Poles in this, the bitterest winter Europe has known in 40 years, are homeless, starving, and devoid of hope.

The Nazi engineers of destruction are rebuilding now in a desperate effort to bring order out of chaos so that when the curtain is to be lifted sometime this spring there will be visible a picture of seeming tranquility. But what these engineers seem to have overlooked is that human lives have been involved and human souls and human ideals. And these cannot readily be repaired, no matter how ingeniously the blueprint may be drafted.

It has been no easy task putting this picture together, because the dimensions are so vast and this translocation of populations so unprecedented. Once put together, however, it spells out a tale that has not been equalled for sheer ruthlessness since the Mongol hordes of Tamerlane scourged the world back in the Middle Ages. Never, certainly in modern European history, has such a panorama of death and destruction been visited by a conqueror upon a helpless and unarmed civilian population.

It is the full impact of this picture, now for the first time revealing itself in its true gigantic proportions, that has roused such powerful world spokesmen as Pope Pius XII and Winston Churchill to cry out to the world in shocked and unbelieving indignation at the utter ruthlessness of the Nazi destruction in Poland. For this is a massive and wholesale tyranny, trying to achieve a condition in a few short months that whole centuries of pillage, rape, and massacre have been unable to effect. This, gentlemen, is an economic "Blitzkrieg," more devastating in scope and plan than any ever before devised by man.

The end these master strategists seek is the complete domination, social and economic, of an area 33,000 square miles in extent, populated until last September by 9,000,000 people, of whom only 460,000 were German.

The realization of this plan calls for the brutal translocation of nearly all the original Polish inhabitants. The plan as it now reveals itself will not tolerate the existence of even the smallest independent Polish state. Therefore, there began last September, and is still being carried out, the great mass expulsion of all Poles in the western Provinces of Pomorze, Poznan, and Silesia, as well as Kalisz, Lodz, Konin, Wloclaw, Ciechanow, and Suwalki.

The program is cunningly aimed at the very core of race solidarity—the home and family. And it is this inhuman strategy that has thus far deported hundreds of thousands of shattered Polish family units and set them down in the blizzard-swept plains of the central section, in the region of Kielce and Radom and directly east and south of Warsaw.

I used the word "deported," and it has a particularly ugly significance when applied to a people who are being deported within the confines of their own country. We Americans from the Middle West would still technically be within the confines of our own country were we, say, suddenly uprooted and forced into transports destined for Alaska. And that in a similar way approximates this mass expulsion of Polish city dwellers into the Siberian and desolate interior of their own land.

These mournful transports that move back and forth across the map of Poland have been running on regular schedules since last September. They are composed mostly of long trains of cattle cars, jammed tightly with famished and hopeless men, women, and children. There has been no let-up because of the intense subzero temperatures nor because the flimsy barracks at the end of the line are insufficient to house all these helpless migrants. These sections into which these deportees are being dumped are for the most part sparsely settled and primitive. Since the coming of the exiles the barns and sheds have been packed, and the homes of the natives are crowded to the rafters with exiled men, women, and children. As a physician, I know that when the weather gets warmer typhus and typhoid will be rampant unless the capable ministrations of the American Red Cross get there in time.

These ever-expanding colonies are not composed of criminals—nor do they include the young and the brave who resisted the invaders' lash. The rebel met a far more gentle fate at the firing-squad wall. These deportees are members of the peaceful and nonviolent civilian population. They are former city dwellers, accustomed to the conveniences of urban centers. Only a few short months ago they enjoyed homes and jobs, music and laughter. Thinly clad and starving, it is they who were seen as late as December wandering—faint and numb—along the snow-packed roadways at journey's end.

The technique by which the hapless Polish householder is dispossessed and torn from his family is a horrible thing to contemplate.

The technique is this: The Gestapo come down a street, blow a whistle before the home of the family about to be sent into exile, and when a response from within is elicited, the occupants of the house are given a scant few minutes to throw together all their pitifully small ration of belongings—in no instance to exceed 10 kilos (about 22 pounds)—and are then herded off to a temporary barracks.

Here the first chapter in segregation begins: The aged are sheltered apart from the children. Later, there is further segregation. Males, who are able to withstand the rigors of manual toil are deported in cattle cars into the interior of Germany. Those males regarded as suspects are imprisoned in concentration camps. The remainder of the family group is then ready for the long trek to the "no man's land" of the interior.

This wasteland the Germans describe as the "remainder area" or the "governor's province." It is administered by Governor Frank and includes barely about 36,000 square miles, of which, however, about 8,000 square miles have been excluded for the so-called Jewish reservation of Lublin. In short, the Polish reservation into which the Nazis are now trying frantically to crowd in between 18,000,000 and 20,000,000 people actually covers an area of approximately 28,000 square miles or little more than the area of West Virginia.

These deportations are carried out on a wholesale basis. An entire street is barred off and the occupants fall at one and the same time into the Gestapo dragnet. In the cities of Danzig, Gdynia, Orlowo, Poznan, and Bydgoszcz where thousands were evacuated, the ruthless irony of the situation was well revealed. Into these cities and into these emptied homes—in some cases before the fires in the stoves had a chance to die out—were thrust the incoming German Balts—many of whom for the first time in their lives were to see and acquire relatively luxurious apartments—in many cases equipped with radios, electric lights, running water, and clean linen.

So incredible, so preposterous does this whole program sound that it is no wonder His Holiness in his January 2 broadcast from Rome, spoke with such apparent shock as his outraged voice cried out to the world. I quote:

Destitution, destruction, and infamy of every description * * * Inexcusable excesses. * * * The richest part of Poland is being unceremoniously stolen from the Poles. * * * A system of interior deportations and zonings. * * * Stark hunger starves 70 percent of Poland's population in the face. * * * Jews and Poles are being herded into separate ghettos. * * * Famine is on the way * * *

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TENEROWICZ. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I have been listening intently to the gentleman's statement. In the first part of the statement the gentleman indicated that Poland must have help and have help immediately. Now the gentleman is describing the situation in Poland. Does the gentleman intend, before he completes his statement, to indicate wherein he believes that help can be had and what the character of the help could be that it is possible to extend to Poland or Polish citizens, under the present situation?

Mr. TENEROWICZ. For the gentleman's information, I will say that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] have introduced bills for this same cause. I have also introduced a bill for the same cause. My bill calls for $15,000,000. The bill which the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] and the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] introduced calls for $10,000,000. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. KEEFE. That is for the purchase of foods?

Mr. TENEROWICZ. That is for the purchase of foods and medical supplies, and so forth.

Mr. KEEFE. To be administered by the German Red Cross or to be administered through our Red Cross?

Mr. TENEROWICZ. Through the American Red Cross, or for relief, as it may be designated. The Red Cross, for the gentleman's information, does not distribute any food-stuffs.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, right there, I have understood that the American Red Cross has been prohibited from functioning in Poland.

Mr. TENEROWICZ. My understanding is that there is an understanding between the German Red Cross and the American Red Cross.

Mr. KEEFE. I am interested in the subject and if it can be done, I would like to have the gentleman explain. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman's speech, but I just want the gentleman to know that I am interested in that phase of it.

Mr. MACIEJEWSKI. Is it not a fact that there are committee hearings at the present time, and a suggestion has been made that a committee be appointed in the United States and sent there to help out those people?

Mr. TENEROWICZ. I think that is true.

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TENEROWICZ. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I might say that the bills which have been brought before the Foreign Affairs Committee have had only partial hearings. It is my impression, after discussion with the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. BLOOM, that further hearings will be had, and possibly a composite bill brought out to bring relief to stricken Poland. All the details, of course, will have to be worked out. We do not know what cooperation we can get from the German Government as it is constituted today. We do know that the American Red Cross has not had any good fortune up to the present time, and such work as is going on has to be through cooperation with the German Red Cross. As the learned gentleman has stated, the Red Cross does not distribute food-stuffs, so that it might be necessary to work out a method and create a relief organization of some sort. Then it might be possible, and the precedents are ample for it—to send food-stuffs and clothing to the needy in Poland and distribute them through a relief organization that we establish for the purpose. For that reason it may be necessary for a committee bill to be brought out embodying all those ideas, and it is my impression, after conversation with the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. BLOOM, that further hearings will be had and possibly a composite bill brought out for one purpose.

I am sorry to have taken up so much of the gentleman's time, but I am sure the chairman of the subcommittee will give the gentleman additional time.

Mr. TENEROWICZ. I thank my colleague from Michigan.

Meantime the executions of Poles in the western sections continues. Directly from the Polish Government information department in France I have a report of barbarous mass execution of 5,000 leading citizens of Polish Silesia. I have, too, the report from unimpeachable diplomatic channels of how the Bishop of Lodz, Monsignor Jasinski, was forced to sweep the square in front of the cathedral before a jeering group of storm troopers and members of the German minority.

The outrages that have been inflicted on the Jewish members of the population have been widespread and conducted with a degree of hate that has been murderous in the extreme. When I speak of Poland and Poles, however, it is to be understood that I speak also of the Jewish elements who have been part and parcel of Poland down through the centuries and who are now under the lash of common persecution being welded more closely into the interdenominational Polish family.

A report from Paris, dated January 2, informs us that these executions of Poles in the western provinces must be witnessed by the remaining members of the Polish population. This same source further reports that in Leszno, where 20 Poles were drawn up in a public square, the execution was witnessed by a great commandeered crowd, including many youths and children.

The Nazis make no exceptions to their iron-fisted edicts. Neither women nor children, men of God, nor custodians of the arts and sciences are being granted any immunity. Nazi repressions, in fact, are aimed chiefly at the educated classes.

For the first time since 1364, when it was founded 576 years ago, the doors of the University of Cracow have been closed, and all its staff of professors and assistant professors, numbering 160, have been confined in concentration camps "somewhere in Germany."

For, along with the destruction of home and family, the annihilation of Polish culture is one of the main objects of the Nazi campaign. Books from the great universities and public libraries of Warsaw were wantonly destroyed shortly after occupation. Of this I was informed last week by a person who departed Warsaw December 29 and who had been resident prior to and during the military attack on the city.

This same informant, who begs anonymity for fear of reprisals, related that on last Christmas eve, because a German resident met violent death, the Gestapo dragnet crossed the city and enmeshed 160 male members of the Polish population. My informant—and I judge him to be highly credible—asserts that in retaliation all of these 160 Poles, ranging in age from 12 years to 80, were put to death by firing squads. This, mind you, last Christmas.

According to another communique of the Polish Government Information Department, a list of 12 well-known prelates and priests, including Msgr. Leopold Bilko, administrator in Karvina, and Father Superior Francis Kaluza, administrator in Teshen West, were arrested and imprisoned in the small area of the diocese of Silesia.

The suppression of religious life in the country is proceeding methodically, as has been graphically pointed out by Cardinal Hlond. All Roman Catholic churches in Pomorze have been closed down. In all towns and villages, religious monuments and statues have been destroyed. Not even the wayside crosses on Polish roads are being spared. The Jewish synagogues, of course, were among the first targets of destruction.

Suicide—a crime unusual to the Polish population in normal times—is being practiced on a wholesale scale. So rife is this practice and so numerous the toll that of late the German-controlled press has featured in special columns the names of these self-destructed.

The Gestapo is omnipresent. Agents of this order of Nazi dishonor walk in pairs, and when meeting two persons engaged in conversation, hold them up, separate them for individual examinations, and then, however slight may be the omissions or digressions, the arrest of the pedestrians follows on the spot.

So vicious is the Gestapo reign that in Kutno they placarded the city with posters warning all inhabitants that "anyone smiling ironically or failing to take his hat off on meeting members of the German military forces or uniformed members of the National Socialist Party would be subject to severe punishment." "Severe punishment" in practice means in many instances the death penalty.

To emphasize this Gestapo reign of terror which now prevails in all Polish cities, I am going to take the liberty to read a Gestapo order which was posted in the city of Thorn (Torun) October 27, 1939, by the city police chief, Weberstedt, and smuggled out of the country and brought to my attention here in Washington. I quote from that order:

In order to hold back a part of the Polish population from behaving in a disrespectful manner, I hereby order the following:

(1) Polish citizens are to make way for the representatives of the German Army when they are distinguished by their uniform and armbands. The street belongs to the victors and not to the vanquished.

(2) Male Polish citizens are to tip their hats in front of the leading personalities of the state, party, and Army.

(3) The German greeting by raising the right hand and saying "Heil Hitler" is not allowed for Poles.

(4) In places of business and at market places the representatives of the German forces and their subordinates, as well as people of German blood, are to be served first. The vanquished are to be waited on afterward.

(5) The wearing of Polish student uniforms, caps with badges, etc., as well as the wearing of the Polish national emblem on the part of Polish railroad and post-office officials is forbidden.

(6) The assembling of groups on the street and at street corners, especially of young people, will not be tolerated.

(7) Anyone who speaks to and insults German women and girls will be exemplarily punished.

(8) Polish women who speak to Germans or annoy them will be brought to bordellos.

(9) All vehicles and bicycles are to be made visible in darkness by lamps and red tail light. Violations are to be punished and the bicycle confiscated. People are not permitted the use of these vehicles in darkness until they have complied with this regulation.

(10) It is absolutely necessary to take care of the demands [follow the orders] of the National Socialistic Motor Corps [traffic policemen]. Traffic regulations will be issued shortly.

In case Poles, who have not yet recognized that they are the vanquished and we are the victors, do anything against the above regulations, they make themselves liable to severe punishment.

Without digressing, I wish here to make a point which was very ably expressed recently by Oswald Garrison Villard, who said, "I have a far greater respect for the people of Germany than their own Government has for them." I share that sentiment.

I have noted, and I trust I have so conveyed the impression, that this entire, barbarous program of mass evacuation and assassination has been carried out by the Gestapo—the Nazi terroristic arm. And the reason for this, a ranking military official has informed me, is that the soldiers of the Reich could not safely be entrusted with so revolting a commission. The Gestapo and the so-called Elite Guards are the sole agencies for such matters of civilian "disciplining," if that is the proper word.

And somehow, despite all the Nazi's inhumanity to man, I find a small measure of hope in this fact: The Nazi philosophers who have figuratively torn the word "mercy" from their dictionaries, have not yet and never will, I trust, succeed in infusing the rank and file of Germany with their materialistic creed.

No, they cannot trust the young soldiers of the Reich to do their cowards' work for them. They must rely on their hand-picked terrorists and assassins—the like of whom we in this country could only muster were we, say, to open the doors of our State prisons and asylums for the criminally insane.

As evidence of what I am saying, émigrés from Cracow assert that immediately after the occupation of the city, the military police were recruited from Austrian elements of the Nazi Army. But this kind of policing did not work. These Austrians rebelled at their tasks and many deserted with the consequence that within a fortnight it was necessary that they be replaced by members of the Gestapo, imported from Brunswick. One of these Cracow eyewitnesses writes:

Following the arrival of the Gestapo the traffic was soon regulated with ruthless brutality. Passers-by were clubbed on the slightest pretext and it was a frequent sight to see women clubbed with rifles for merely crossing a street contrary to regulations.

The ancient and royal city of Cracow, which had been spared most of the ravages of the military destruction, is, it would seem from this, bearing its full share of the post-war horrors.

The professional classes and the office workers of Cracow and Warsaw, the middle classes in general, are described as being "abjectly destitute." Lawyers, doctors, and clerks—all those classes whose lives have been sedentary—suddenly deprived of incomes and savings, are forced to beg from the harder sections of the community the crusts of bread on which they survive.

The food shortage throughout the entire country has grown progressively worse from month to month. Poland in September had ample food, but the bulk of it, all informants agree, has by this time been transported into the boycott-harassed interior of the warring Reich.

Because I have referred exclusively to the German-occupied section of Poland is in no way intended to indicate that Russia is being negatively approved. The contrary is very much the case. My stressing of the German tyranny is simply due to the fact that while there has been some news from the western section, news from the Russian-occupied east has been almost totally absent. Such reports as have filtered through the diplomatic grapevine, however, indicate that the Russian zeal for "reconstruction" is equally ruthless as it moves ahead. The Russians have positively refused offers to cooperate with the Red Cross or any other humanitarian agency.

The American Red Cross, with approximately $750,000 at its disposal, was until last week handling their job in Poland by remote control, in collaboration with the German and Polish Red Cross organizations. As you know, gentlemen, the Red Cross sphere is limited to medical and hygienic ministrations. In addition the Commission for Polish Relief, Inc., has succeeded in shipping into Poland 15,000 gallons of cod-liver oil and a quantity of evaporated milk. But food and clothing have not as yet gone in, and without these essentials millions who now cling to life by the scantiest of threads will have died before the summer sun looks down again on Poland.

That is why as a physician and as a Member of this Congress I am making this appeal for approval of my joint resolution to bring immediate aid to Poland.

There is ample precedent for such action, in no way running counter to our neutrality laws.

A great race, a race whose blood stream is insolubly mixed into our own American blood, faces near extinction unless succor is brought to her at once. It is not necessary to remind my hearers of the close bonds of sympathy that have linked America and Poland together for more than 150 years. Nor will it be necessary to remind them that our great Americans have been the heroes of young Poland throughout that span of time. I merely wish to assert as calmly as is possible that unless material aid is brought to Poland at once, the year 1940 will close on a chapter of starvation and disease such as the modern world has never before known. And I would be highly remiss in my duties as an American, who is much closer to the picture than the average, if I sat idly by in the face of such a catastrophe and said nothing when the time for action is now. [Applause.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I shall address myself for a few moments to the appropriation for the State Department and raise the question as to whether the matter I shall present, if it were typical of the practices of the State Department, would not justify refusing this Department any appropriation whatsoever. I believe the circumstances herein set out are calculated only to serve the purpose of foreign rather than domestic interests. I refer to the subject matter covered by my resolution of inquiry presented last week and answered by the Treasury Department. In the reply it was stated that the so-called Newfoundland deal was initiated on the request of the State Department. The records of the Customs Department amply bear this out.

The Newfoundland deal to which I refer, copy of the act relating to which I hold in my hand, being that whereby the present government of the Dominion Colony of Newfoundland, provides for a grant by that government of $200,000 to the General Seafoods Corporation, in return for which the General Seafoods Corporation agrees to employ Newfoundland fishermen in catching fish up in Newfoundland, to employ Newfoundland labor in the plant there provided on the coast of Newfoundland; and under the curious provisions of our Treasury regulations, as recently revised, those fish, almost entirely of Newfoundland origin and processing, are to enter the United States market duty free. In other words, an American fishery as now defined by our Treasury Department under the Customs Division is a fishery in which American fishermen may not be employed. So extraordinary a result has been secured by the State Department requesting that the Treasury should revise their current regulations and introduce a so-called Treasury decision. Under the treaty of 1818 it was provided that our fishermen might land their fish on the "uninhabited" coast of Newfoundland, "dry and cure them," and bring those fish back to the United States. It is a perversion of that ancient "treaty right" under which the General Seafoods Corporation today is going to be enabled, if the Treasury regulations initiated on the motion of our State Department shall stand, to enter our market absolutely duty free. This was accomplished by the simple addition on August 10, 1938, of the following language to the existing Treasury regulation as to what constitutes an American fishery. It formerly provided that it should be a fishery carried on under the American flag by an American vessel. Now they add these three lines:

And may include a shore station operated in conjunction with such vessels by the owner or masters thereof.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. I am wondering if the Treasury Department has not exceeded its authority in putting into effect regulations of this nature? Has not the Treasury Department usurped the functions of Congress in doing this and bringing into this country something on the free list that ordinarily would be on the dutiable list?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is very interesting to note that on the question of the declared policy therein involved, three judges of the customs court seemed to consider that such action could not have been in the contemplation of Congress in any enactment of authority delegated to the customs. I quote from the decision of these judges some time ago:

To hold that these are the product of an American fishery—

Referring to a similar case—would result in permitting any American to go to British territory, prosecute his calling solely through British employees, using British supplies, and bring himself within the clause of this statute permitting free entry. We think such was not the intent of Congress.

And I say that in the face of that clear judicial holding our customs department has now permitted the entry of these fish.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. The gentleman stated a moment ago that the men employed in the plants processing these fish in Newfoundland may not be Americans; in other words, Americans were excluded from employment in those plants, as I understand.

Mr. BREWSTER. I would like to quote the precise language of the General Sea Foods Act, so-called.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. If the gentleman will yield, it would seem to me that under those circumstances the Treasury Department has gone far afield, far beyond its duties and responsibilities and the powers granted it by the Constitution and the Congress.

Mr. BREWSTER. I would like to read to the gentleman the exact language of the Newfoundland statute. Remember, this is the Newfoundland law under which General Seafoods Corporation were to act.

To the extent that the same are reasonably available—

And I can assure you that they are always available—only Newfoundland citizens resident at the time in Newfoundland—

They will not even permit a Newfoundland citizen who has come to this country to be employed. They are left here on our dole, for us to take care of—shall be employed in the company's shore stations with the exception of the managerial and supervisory staffs.

And the same restriction applies with reference to people employed on the company's boats or vessels engaged in fishing within Newfoundland or in carrying merchandise from Newfoundland to the United States.

In other words, the very boat that brings these fish to New York or Chicago must employ Newfoundland residents.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. As I understand it, these fish come in here duty free under the Treasury decision?

Mr. BREWSTER. They do.

Mr. TREADWAY. Under what provision of law is that permitted?

Mr. BREWSTER. Because they are defined as an American fishery under this extraordinary decision of the Treasury Department. An American fishery is defined as a fishery in which American citizens may not be employed.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is a pretty far-fetched decision, in my judgment.

Mr. BREWSTER. It seems to me fantastic in the extreme.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would that involve in any way the reciprocal treaties?

Mr. BREWSTER. No; not at all. As a matter of fact, the reciprocal-trade agreements reduced the duty on Canadian fish from 2½ to 1½, and that involves a determination that 1½ at least is a necessary duty, since it is not as low as might have been put into effect; yet this means the entire elimination of that protection which the reciprocal-trade authorities themselves have found to be essential.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is absolutely contrary to the reciprocal-trade treaty, which only permits a reduction of 50 percent?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. And it puts these fish on the free list?

Mr. BREWSTER. Absolutely.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I ask whether or not there is any connection between the State Department and experience in fishing? I had always supposed that the Bureau of Fisheries was a commercial proposition.

Mr. BREWSTER. I called on the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, who has recently taken charge of that Department, and he told me he was completely ignorant of the whole affair. I suggested to him that if the State Department and Treasury Department, and, as I shall show in a minute, the Justice Department, were all concerned with fish, it would seem about time that he himself should have the matter brought to his attention, since there will be no American fisheries for him to supervise if there are not American fishermen.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman know of any reason why there should be an expert on fish in the State Department?

Mr. BREWSTER. There has been nothing shown on that. As Dr. Grady stated to me this morning, those matters, of course, should be handled entirely by the Bureau of Fisheries or by the Customs.

Mr. TREADWAY. I hold in my hand a memorandum taken from the Fishery Service Bulletin. That is a recognized publication, as I understand.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. It says that—

Leo D. Sturgeon, Foreign Service officer of the Department of State, has been assigned to serve as assistant to Counselor R. Walton Moore. The primary duty of Mr. Sturgeon is to assist in the formulation of policy and in the coordination of action in the State Department on international aspects of fishery matters.

Can the gentleman conceive what that individual is going to do?

Mr. BREWSTER. The fact that there has been no such position heretofore seems to indicate that it had not been regarded as essential. Whether it is in dealing with situations of this character now, I do not know, but that designation curiously enough coincided with this Newfoundland deal.

Mr. TREADWAY. Does this bill that we are now considering carry any appropriation for such an official as that to which I have just referred?

Mr. BREWSTER. I would have to ask the members of the committee. You cannot discover it in any item any more than you can the designation of many of the officials down there.

Mr. TREADWAY. This item goes on to state:

This will involve the study and handling of problems concerning methods of regulating the fisheries and the foundation of arrangements for the conservation of international fisheries of concern to American interests. Mr. Sturgeon will act as liaison officer between the Department of State and other Government agencies.

He has not gone very far if Mr. Ickes himself, who is at the head of another department, does not know of the responsibilities of the office.

Mr. BREWSTER. There seems to be a complete lack of coordination with the Bureau of Fisheries and Mr. Ickes. There seems to be a close liaison between the State Department and Customs Department in engineering this Newfoundland deal. Mr. Grady stated he did not realize that it had been initiated in the State Department.

Mr. TREADWAY. Dr. Grady's main interest is the reduction of tariff to the extent of 50 percent, but the entire obliteration of the tariff is surely not within his province.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think he will recognize that before this is over.

Mr. TREADWAY. Are the appropriations under the reorganization bill included here so that if this position has been set up in the department we can find what the man's salary is and what his duties are?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it is within the appropriation for the State Department, as well as all of these newly designated positions.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is put in such general terms that you cannot particularize and find out about any one particular job?

Mr. BREWSTER. I know a careful examination has been made of the hearings and we cannot discover some of these new officials.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RABAUT. The question was asked about Mr. Sturgeon. I may say he is an officer in the Foreign Service Division.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. RABAUT. And he has been assigned to this particular activity.

Mr. BREWSTER. The question is why this designation should come at this time? He had formerly been vice consul in Japan. The first time he became an expert in fisheries is when he went to Alaska a few years ago. Now, why is it necessary to create this particular type of office?

Mr. RABAUT. We are not informed why this particular office has been established at this particular time, but he is a Foreign Service officer in charge of this work now.

Mr. BREWSTER. We are very much concerned on account of this Newfoundland deal, which we feel has been too greatly stimulated by the State Department. It is not the business of that Department to interfere in matters of this kind.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is it not safe to assume that anyone named "Sturgeon" is an expert on fish?

Mr. BREWSTER. He certainly should be able to qualify.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The gentleman's statements are disturbing to all of us who are interested in fishing and who are opposed to encroachments upon the fish industry of the United States. Can the gentleman tell the Members of the House how it should come to pass that no publicity has attended the operation of this situation whereby the Treasury Department apparently throws wide open the markets of the United States to foreign products without any duty whatever in competition with the products of the fishermen of this country?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it certainly is proper that the gentleman from a district including Gloucester should be concerned about the significance of this secret and sinister operation by which this change was brought about without public notice or hearing of any character, although it was nicely calculated to destroy the fish industry of New England. This constitutes to me one of the most serious aspects of the whole affair. I presented a resolution of inquiry 1 week ago asking the Treasury Department why they made this change. They replied, as you will find in the RECORD, that the State Department requested it, and that the General Seafoods Corporation filed a lengthy brief of 140 printed pages to persuade them. For 6 long months pressure was brought to bear to bring them to make that change. Then they promulgated this ruling, under which the American market is to be flooded.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. This ruling was promulgated, as I understand, with a decision of the court to the contrary?

Mr. BREWSTER. I have read the decision of the court, in which three judges said that the Congress could never have intended such a consequence.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. By such action of the Treasury Department they have circumvented the decision of the court?

Mr. BREWSTER. It would so appear.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In respect of the General Seafoods Corporation, the gentleman mentioned some operations on the Newfoundland coast. How were they going to carry on those operations? Was there an understanding with the Newfoundland Government, and has this been publicized in Newfoundland?

Mr. BREWSTER. In December this Act No. 49 was published. As you may understand, the Newfoundland Government is now under a commission. The people of Newfoundland have no authority. They are under control of a commission designated from London. The government is now operated by His Excellency, Vice Admiral Sir Humphrey Thomas Walwyn, Knight Commander of the Most Exalted Order of the Star of India, Knight Commander of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, Companion of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the Island of Newfoundland and its dependencies. In other words, that gentleman has promulgated this agreement, and the citizens of Newfoundland, themselves, did not even have full knowledge of what was going on, and protested the performance.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What happened between the Newfoundland Government and the Sea Foods Corporation?

Mr. BREWSTER. A gentleman went up there and negotiated this deal in secrecy. Then he was able to persuade the State Department to ask the Customs to change their rulings in order to make it possible, and finally secured the promulgation of this act.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. In regard to the operation of the plant in Newfoundland, let us make it clear as to what the Newfoundland Government is doing by way of subsidizing this plan or providing any money. What has been done in that respect?

Mr. BREWSTER. Two hundred thousand dollars is furnished to build this plant in Newfoundland, with a provision that only Newfoundland labor will be employed. Hon. Robert Ewbank, the Commissioner of Natural Resources, had this to say in a public address:

The advantages which Newfoundland would gain through this concession are obvious, as well as the employment of Newfoundland fishermen and labor. The southwest coast certainly needs help, since large numbers of the population in this region are now on the dole.

If the fishermen up there are on the dole, what about the 19,000 fishermen of New England who will be put on the dole by the provisions of this act?

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. This is apparently the same kind of policy that was followed 2 years ago, when the Committee on Appropriations brought out a bill appropriating $1,000,000 for the Surplus Commodities Corporation to buy 10,000,000 pounds of surplus fresh and frozen fish. On investigation I found that we had shipped in from Canada and foreign countries, during 1937—the first year under the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement—155,229,330 pounds of fresh and frozen fish, and that we had shipped in under the treaty during January 1937, 12,918,000 pounds. In other words, here we were shipping into this country 13,000,000 pounds of fresh and frozen fish a month and at the same time spending $1,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to buy back 10,000,000 pounds of fish surplus.

At that time I made the statement that in the olden days when we used to call a State hospital an insane asylum they had certain old-fashioned tests of sanity. One of the tests was that they would put the so-called patient into a room in which there was a water faucet, turn on the faucet, and give him a mop and a water pail. If the patient turned the faucet off before he mopped up the floor they knew he had some sense, but if he kept mopping up the floor with the faucet running wide open, they knew he was crazy. Yet here we are appropriating $1,000,000 to buy up a fresh and frozen fish surplus with the Canadian fish faucet running wide open to the tune of 13,000,000 pounds a month. I said then and I say now that of all the cockeyed, crazy, asinine policies, this is the worst. Apparently the policy to which the gentleman is referring falls into the same category.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is going somewhat further, because we did have a 2-cent tariff and now we are going to wipe that out; in other words, the man is not only going to leave the faucet running, he is going to open it up a couple of turns.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Under the Canadian trade agreement entered into a short time ago, the duty on filleted fish, and that, after all, is the type of fish in which we are interested in this discussion, was reduced from 2½ cents a pound to 1½ cents a pound. Is not that correct?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Is there any estimate as to the number of pounds this organization in Newfoundland must manufacture each year in order to get the benefit of that $200,000 plant?

Mr. BREWSTER. They obligate themselves to provide 15,000,000 pounds, processing over 30,000,000 pounds of fish each year within the first 3 years.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Thirty million pounds a year?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes; that is what the plant is designed for.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. What does the gentleman understand the domestic production of that fish is in the United States?

Mr. BREWSTER. I should have to defer to the gentleman from Massachusetts on that, but I think that around 7,000,000 to 10,000,000 pounds of frozen fillets is what the market has been absorbing until recently. I have the figures for the total.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I have them here and will put them in the RECORD later.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Maine 10 more minutes.

Mr. BREWSTER. It might be suggested that our fish supplies were being depleted. If there is such a suggestion, I am pleased to point out that in the past 10 years the fish landings along the New England coast have increased by 25 percent and the per-pound price has decreased 25 percent. What warrant can there be then for importing vast quantities of fish from Newfoundland or elsewhere when we have a record of that kind as to the service rendered by the fishermen of the United States?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me to make this suggestion?

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman's presentation is typical of the whole administration policy, is it not?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it would be a fair statement that we could give many other examples.

Mr. GIFFORD. We are going to buy fish cheaper, are we not?

Mr. BREWSTER. I should think so.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize the gentleman has been very generous with his time, and my question is this: Is the operation of this Newfoundland outfit aimed at supplying the American market?

Mr. BREWSTER. There is no question about it. There have been statements made that it was to go to England; but, as a matter of fact, the entire record at the Customs Bureau shows clearly that the principal objective of this agreement is to supply the American market with its fish; and if it were not for that, the project would not interest them.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Of course, the gentleman knows that I have already joined with him in protesting about this matter, but does not this question enter into the matter also? This General Seafoods Corporation is taking advantage of the substandard labor conditions which exist in Newfoundland today.

Mr. BREWSTER. Unquestionably.

Mr. CONNERY. And they intend to bring this fish into this country as against the higher standards of wages paid in this country, especially in New England.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is a perfect illustration of the point for which the gentleman himself has contended.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman tell the House what the position of union labor is on the matter?

Mr. BREWSTER. The business agent of the Fisherman's Union in New England has been fighting this from the start and has been undertaking to secure prosecution of what he contends to be monopolistic practices in this trade, and thus far has been able to get no consideration or redress whatsoever.

I now want to call attention to the fact that there is a United States customs form which provides that before they can bring fish into our market they must furnish an affidavit that they are of American origin, and I want to state that the customs are going to be obliged to revise that form, because as the General Seafoods point out, under that form, they could not bring in the fish. In other words, they must not only change our regulations but they are obliged to revise the Treasury forms of the United States in order to permit the entry of these fish. You may say that anybody could take advantage of it. As a matter of fact, no other concern can, because Newfoundland grants to them an exclusive monopoly in this entire operation. Whether or not this comes within the inhibitions of our conspiracy laws and monopolistic practices is certainly for the Justice Department seriously to consider.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me just once more?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Failing to come under the Conspiracy Act, does not the gentleman believe it offers grounds upon which might be based proceedings that could be inaugurated by the House—impeachment proceedings of a public official?

Mr. BREWSTER. I certainly think there should be at least an inquiry about this entire matter, and I trust the Members of this House will avail themselves of the privilege of examining the records of the customs to see how this was brought about.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BREWSTER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is this General Seafoods Corporation a part of the General Foods Corporation?

Mr. BREWSTER. It is a subsidiary of that corporation.

Mr. HINSHAW. And who is one of the largest stockholders in that corporation might be of interest to the United States.

Mr. BREWSTER. I will leave the gentleman to inquire about that.

Mr. HINSHAW. Was he a former Ambassador to Russia?

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it is in his family, and I think he is now an official of the State Department.

Mr. HINSHAW. Oh, I see. What job does he have in the State Department?

Mr. BREWSTER. I have not been able to discover. He is a special assistant to the Secretary of State; and I want to say in justice to Mr. Joseph Davies, who is the gentleman to whom I presume the gentleman from California refers, as a member of his family is one of the largest stockholders in General Foods and a director thereof, that I have no evidence to indicate that he himself participated in this, and I certainly should be reluctant to think that the gentleman would use his official position for this purpose.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would be very reluctant to think so.

Mr. BREWSTER. I trust there will be no difficulty about securing the rescinding of this Treasury decision and the reconsideration of this matter that we desire, and that in this request we shall be supported by all the officials concerned in the State Department.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would hope so.

MAINE BLUEBERRIES AND LOBSTERS

Mr. BREWSTER. I wish to mention one more point. While the primary impact of this is on the deep-sea fisheries of New England, it also involves the handling of blueberries and lobsters, industries vital to my section of our country. As the lobsters are coming in free from this enormous processing plant, and the blueberries, which are in undoubted abundance on the coast of Newfoundland, are also to have facilities so available, it will mean a further dumping of American citizens in the eastern part of the country on the dole, as their blueberry market may be entirely wiped out.

In conclusion, aside from the gentleman to whom reference has been made, Mr. Gardner Poole is the chairman of the Fisheries Advisory Committee here and a director of this concern, and Mr. Francis, the president, recently issued a very glowing speech on how to solve the unemployment problem, in which he said it was the duty of great concerns to see to it that the youth of America were given a chance for jobs. How American youth are going to get a job when we help Newfoundland citizens to the exclusion of our great fishing industry beggars imagination.

Mr. Chairman, we are filing today, Members from New England on both sides concerned with this situation, a petition asking the Customs Bureau to rescind this decision made without hearing, made without notice of any character to the great fishing industry of this country, and give an opportunity to be heard on this subject; and I hope that not only the Treasury Department but the State Department that initiated this change, including Dr. Grady, in charge of trade agreements, and all other officials concerned, including Mr. Sturgeon, will join with the Members of Congress in asking that at least American fishermen and the fishing interests shall have an opportunity to be heard before their industry is entirely wiped out. [Applause.]

SELF-RELIANT FISHERMEN

The fish industry has few friends—at least in the Government. Fishermen are a self-reliant lot; they have asked for little, preferring to face their own problems and to solve them in their own way. But while farmers are receiving showers of checks from the Treasury, the unemployed industrial workers receiving jobs to fill in time, and striking for more, the fishermen receive not benefits but penalties, hindrances, and oppression. These take many forms.

The fish industry contributes its share of the taxes, which are often used to benefit its competitors, the farmers, the producers of fruits and poultry, the dairymen, and cattle growers, to help tenant farmers to buy land to produce more food, to build power plants to electrify his home and buy electrical gadgets for him to use. Fishermen and the fish industry get few, if any, of these benefits for which they help to pay.

Even in the distribution of food products by the Federal Surplus Commodity Administration to the unemployed under the stamp scheme fish is specifically excluded by the terms of the regulations under which the distribution is made. The money with which these surplus commodities are purchased comes in part from taxes paid by the fish industry. The free distribution of foods to the needy at public expense is a moderate benefit to the producers in removing surpluses, but more in bringing them, to some extent, before these people who would be in position to purchase the same product themselves when they are restored to private employment. This modest benefit is denied to the fisheries.

The reciprocal-trade agreements are a serious matter to producers of codfish and haddock in the New England States. The great bulk of these fish are filleted and Canada is at present the source of practically all imported fillets. The figures available to the Ways and Means Committee in 1930 showed that our Canadian neighbors could produce fillets at a cost of 2½ cents per pound cheaper than American producers could at Boston, and accordingly the duty was fixed at 2½ cents per pound in the Tariff Act of 1930, which duty, as exactly as possible, compensated the difference in cost of production. It put no penalty at all on Canadian producers, it merely put them on a parity with our own producers and gave them the same opportunity in our markets as our own fishermen had.

These facts were all presented in detail at a hearing held by the State Department before the British and Canadian trade agreements were negotiated. In these three-cornered negotiations the Canadians were insisting on a reduction in the duty on fillets from 2½ to 1¼ cents per pound, which would give them an advantage over our own fishermen of 1¼ cents, even though they already enjoyed an equal opportunity in the American markets.

UNITED STATES GETS APPLESAUCE?

When the agreements were finally signed the United States yielded 25 percent of the duty, or five-eighths cent per pound, on fillets up to 15,000,000 pounds and received a 50-percent cut on the duty on apples into England. So the Canadians at once acquired an advantage of five-eighths cent per pound over our own fishermen.

Since these trade agreements were signed, however, the exchange value of the Canadian dollar has declined by 13 percent—and seems headed further downward—enabling the Canadians to sell fillets for 87 of our cents here and get 1 of their dollars in exchange for it. The combination of reduction in duty granted by the trade treaty and decline in exchange of the Canadian dollar together make the present protection of our own fisheries only 65.3 percent of what it was before, so that Canadians now have 34.7 percent, or seven-eighths cent per pound advantage over our own people on a product which sells at 7 to 12 cents per pound wholesale. Now, since whole fish yield about 42 percent of their weight in fillets, this reduction of seven-eighths cent on fillets is equivalent to three-eighths cent a pound of whole fish, and the 15,000,000 pounds of fillets is equivalent to 36,000,000 pounds of whole fish, so the concession amounts, so far as Canada alone is concerned, to $135,000 per year advantage over our own fishermen in the New England States. The 36,000,000 pounds of whole fish is the production of 10 large trawlers employing about 200 men; the 15,000,000 pounds of fillets would require the skilled labor ashore of another 100 men to cut, wrap, pack and ship, sell, and so forth, involving a pay roll of more than $150,000 per year, and a total of some $300,000 per year thrown to Canada from here.

But, in addition to this, many of the duty concessions granted by Great Britain to the United States on our exports to England and Canada in return for our concessions have disappeared. For example, the English have put an absolute embargo on apples since the outbreak of war and their purchases of tobacco and other farm products are all but discontinued.

ONE-SIDED DEAL

Canada therefore enjoys one-sided privileges granted including the 25-percent cut in duty on fish shipped into the United States, even though this was one of the concessions made to help the apple growers and other producers of American commodities with their English markets. So even the advantages for which the fisheries, among other industries, are penalized, have disappeared and the intended beneficiaries no longer receive the benefits.

FRUIT OF "SMART" TRADING

Let it be said that the fishermen do not begrudge the help the farmers receive from the Government. No complaint of this is heard anywhere from the fishermen. What they fairly object to is downright hindrances and oppression—the opposite of help from the Government, which does not aid the farmers or anybody else.

This "smart" trading on our part is now beginning to bear its inevitable fruit, in the moving of our own industries to more hospitable Canadian and Newfoundland soil. Announcement has been made of the construction of a fish-processing plant at Caraquet, New Brunswick, Canada, by the Gorton-Pew Fisheries of Gloucester, Mass., and the Mid-Central Fish Co., of Kansas City, Mo., to operate as Gorton-Pew (New Brunswick) Ltd. According to reports, the new plant, designed and built by Canadian architects and engineers, will be subsidized to the extent of $200,000, and is designed to produce 50,000 pounds of cod fillets per day; or a capacity of 10,000,000 fillets if we assume as little as 200 operating days per year. In 1937 the United States produced 78,123,303 pounds of fillets of cod, haddock, hake, and pollock fillets, valued at $7,514,943.

As the duty now stands under the trade agreements, the production of this subsidized plant will, of course, have the advantage over our own fishermen and shore labor of the five-eighths cent in reduced duty, and also the discount on the Canadian dollar now amounting to 13 percent, the two together amounting to a total advantage of about seven-eighths of a cent.

Even before these changes, we in the United States had already been generous in the Tariff Act of 1930; the duty was fixed at the then prevailing difference in cost of production and the Canadians and Newfoundlanders already had a crack at our market equal to that of our own fishermen, while industry and agriculture generally were protected by more than the differences between domestic and foreign costs.

Two of the important products of the fisheries, viz, fish meal and cod-liver oil, which are used by farmers as poultry and livestock feeds, and fertilizers, were both put on the free list.

CLEVER CIRCUMVENTING

A clever means of circumventing this provision of the law has been discovered by our Canadian neighbors, and also, as we shall see later, by our Newfoundland friends as well. This is to furnish the money out of the public funds of the treasury to pay for the land and for construction and equipment of the plant in which fish are to be processed. For example, at the Caraquet, New Brunswick, plant the Dominion of Canada reportedly is putting up $75,000 cash out of general appropriation to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which was intended for promotion and development of the fisheries in Canada. This sum goes directly toward the construction of a $200,000 plant. The remaining $125,000 is to be in the form of bonds, the interest on which is guaranteed by the Government of New Brunswick. All of this $200,000 is spent in Canada in employing architects, engineers, skilled labor, and the purchase of machinery and material.

The American fish company which will operate the plant starts off with a big subsidy in the form of a capital investment. If this capital had to be raised by a bond issue, it would cost at least 6-percent interest on this type of investment, and depreciation of at least 5 percent would have to be charged, a total of, say, 11 percent, or $22,000 per year. If the production of the plant is 10,000,000 pounds per year, the capital subsidy of $22,000 per year is equivalent to twenty-two one-hundredths cent per pound of fillets. Add this to the eighty-seven one-hundredths cent advantage arising from the duty concession to Canada and the depreciation of the Canadian dollar and there is 1.09 cents a pound direct advantage the Canadian plant will have over our own fishermen.

In this country, those who wish to go into or expand a fish business must find and risk their own money for land, buildings, equipment, fishing boats, and pay rolls. Is it any wonder that American fish companies move to Canada and Newfoundland?

The Dominion of Canada aids its fishermen by direct subsidies. From the ninth annual report of their department of fisheries for 1938-39, page 12, it is stated that in that year total cash payments of $471,106.20 were made to eastern Canadian fishermen to replace gear which had been destroyed by storms. The Dominion paid $369,443.57, the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and Quebec paid the rest.

NOT FOR NEW ENGLAND FISHERMEN

No one has heard of payments to New England fishermen for gear damaged in the hurricane of 1938. In the same year—report, pages 15-16—cash bounties paid to fishermen in the Maritime Provinces by the Dominion Government were $159,982.70. The sum of these direct cash subsidies in Canada is $631,083.90, or one-eighth cent per pound for all fish caught in eastern Canada, including bait, herring, and everything. This is equivalent to three-tenths cent per pound of fillets. Add this to the total benefits of duty concessions, currency depreciation, direct subsidy for building the plant; we get the grand total of 1.39 cents per pound direct advantage Canadian fishermen now have over New England fishermen, workers, and employers. Fishermen in the Maritime Provinces also received loans from the Dominion and Provinces of $386,424.38.

But even though this new American-Canadian enterprise operates with foreign labor at low wages, with the advantages of having its capital furnished by Canadian Government subsidy, and supplied by fishermen directly subsidized with cash from the Dominion Treasury, and having the additional advantage of depreciated foreign currency and, on top of all that, reduction of the United States duty itself under the reciprocal agreement, it will still have to pay some, though inadequate, duty when its manufactured fish products are imported into the United States.

The move by another large American fishing company to Newfoundland will not only have all these advantages but a practical monopoly on its operations in Newfoundland, and, in addition, will pay no duty at all when its fish are brought into the United States.

This is the most remarkable piece of political "shenanigans" to be performed under the benign influence of our policy of tariff reductions.

HANDLED VERY QUIETLY

It has been done so quietly as, so far, to attract no public notice, and even the fishing industry in New England and elsewhere, whose interests are vitally at stake, hardly yet know much about it. Apparently, neither do any of our several Government bureaus in Washington. At least, there is no public record showing that they have taken the slightest degree of interest in this "Newfoundland deal" except perhaps to help it along.

The commission of Government of Newfoundland signed, on November 28, 1939, a contract with General Sea Foods Corporation, of Boston, and on December 6, 1939, officially confirmed, approved, and adopted it as Act No. 49, known as the General Sea Foods Corporation Act. Under this act, General Seafoods has the right to select a site for a fisheries enterprise on the southern shore of Newfoundland between Ramea and La Poile.

DETAILS OF NEWFOUNDLAND DEAL

The Government of Newfoundland agrees to acquire the site selected, and General Sea Foods is to build and equip on the site a plant for freezing and packaging fish, including cod, haddock, salmon, lobsters, scallops, and all other kinds of sea life, and also blueberries. It also has the right to install equipment for making oil and fish meal, for smoking, pickling, canning, salting, and curing fish, and also to establish additional plants elsewhere on the coast.

After the plant is built, Newfoundland will reimburse General Sea Foods in cash all of the cost of the plant up to $200,000—including the cost of the land. All building sub-contractors are to be Newfoundlanders insofar as possible. The plant is to have floor space sufficient to process not less than 30,000,000 pounds of marine products a year and is to be equipped at once with freezers, and so forth, to process not less than 10,000,000 pounds annually; at the end of the second year it must be equipped to freeze not less than 15,000,000 pounds, and at the end of the third year not less than 20,000,000 pounds annually. The company agrees to operate the shore station substantially continuously, and in the third and subsequent years it will process not less than 15,000,000 pounds of marine products per year.

LOW RENTAL CHARGE

When the plant is built, Newfoundland will lease it to the corporation for $100 a year for 2 years, and thereafter for the next 20 years for 5 percent of the cost of land and building. Newfoundland further agrees not to charge any duty on building materials, office furniture, and machinery going into the plant—with some exceptions for materials obtainable in Newfoundland; and it will give 100 percent drawback of all duties on imported paper, boxes, cellophane labels, advertising matter, and so forth. The rule governing these duty exemptions in Newfoundland seems to be generally that everything that can be made by Newfoundland labor or bought in Newfoundland must be so made or bought; what is unobtainable in Newfoundland may come in duty free. Newfoundland expressly discriminates against all other American persons and companies, and makes all this practically a monopoly to General Sea Foods by agreeing that it will for 3 years give no financial assistance to any other United States person or firm on that coast—but retains the right so far as all other nationalities are concerned—neither will it give any financial assistance or duty exemptions or make any other concessions to any other concern for 22 years within a 15-mile radius of La Poile, which is the only decent ice-free harbor on the coast.

WILL HIRE ONLY NEWFOUNDLANDERS

Now, what does General Sea Foods agree to do in return for these aids, concessions, and monopolies? It agrees to operate the plant substantially continuously and, from the third year on, to process not less than 15,000,000 pounds of marine products per year; to buy or acquire from Newfoundland fishermen a quantity of marine products equivalent to the production of its own trawlers; it agrees not to employ any labor in its plant, other than supervisors, except Newfoundland citizens resident at the time in Newfoundland, and it further agrees not to employ any fishermen other than resident Newfoundland citizens on its fishing boats, or on its own vessels transporting the products to the United States, except officers required by United States laws.

SEEK UNITED STATES MARKETS

Despite claims of some people that the output largely will be shipped to England, the evidence points to the contrary.

The Newfoundland deal is aimed directly at the United States market; the provisions for employing crews on transport vessels specifically refer to vessels going to United States markets; another paragraph specifies "that no codfish, haddock, or like fish; split, salted, and wet or dry cured in Newfoundland shall, unless the Government permit, be marketed by the company elsewhere than in the continental United States of America." Of course, Newfoundland has markets of her own for salt cod in the tropical countries, including Puerto Rico, Haiti, and the Virgin Islands, and does not want them disturbed. She wants to export only to the United States and is willing to pay for the privilege. She insists upon exclusively Newfoundland labor to be employed in building the plant and operating it. She demands her citizens do all the fishing, not only on Newfoundland boats but also on American trawlers that may be brought there for fishing, and also on American boats transporting the fish to the American market. Newfoundland has no trawlers. No New England fishermen, not even those now fishing for General Sea Foods out of Boston, nor shore workers in their own plant, can go to Newfoundland and get a job with this enterprise even if they were willing to work for the much lower Newfoundland wages.

HUNDRED-MILLION-DOLLAR COMPANY

General Sea Foods certainly cannot be said to need the $200,000 assistance for building the plant. They are a subsidiary of General Foods, a New York corporation of about $60,000,000 capital and about $20,000,000 surplus, and often are described in the press as a "$100,000,000 corporation." Then why does Newfoundland, a poor little country of 284,872 inhabitants—1935 figures—mostly fishermen, raise $200,000 to help out a "hundred million dollar" American corporation? Is it of the nature of a bond and mortgage required by General Sea Foods to insure itself of the privileges and monopoly of the contract for 22 years? Such easily can be inferred from public utterances of Newfoundland officials.

SHREWD DEAL FOR NEWFOUNDLAND

So far, this deal, while of grave import to American fishermen, may be regarded as good shrewd business for the Newfoundlanders in buying their way into the American market—without disturbing their salt-fish market elsewhere—at a cheap price, and finding much-needed employment for their labor in the bargain; it may also, up to this point, be regarded as good business for General Sea Foods, in seeking a good source of raw material, produced by labor at much lower cost than can be had at home without social-security taxes and the obligations of the United States wage and hour laws and other labor legislation with little or no risk of its own money, exemption from Newfoundland duty on machinery and packing materials; freedom from real-estate taxes; and a monopoly if the enterprise succeeds.

If this were all, our American fishermen and fish workers might perhaps have to grin sourly and admit that a fast one had been put over on them. But there is much more: It is not intended that this production by foreigners, in a foreign factory, financed by subsidy of a foreign government and built by foreign workmen, manned by foreign labor, filleting, freezing, and packing fish that are caught by foreign fishermen on either American or foreign boats, and transported to the United States by foreign crews, all of whose wages are paid in depreciated foreign money—it is not intended that any duty at all will be paid on this production in entering the ports of the United States in competition with our own fishermen, workers, and owners. Everything about the enterprise from start to finish is foreign except the ownership of the company and a few trawlers.

WHAT MAGIC LOOPHOLE?

Through what magic loophole is this proposed duty-free entry in the United States of fish arranged? Has any new formula been discovered by which American corporations can hunt one of the cheapest foreign spots in the world and get their capital from foreigners, then produce and bring the products into the United States of America without risk, and scot-free of any duty, in spite of all the tariff laws?

No; not exactly; that is, for nothing except fish from Newfoundland. How is the trick done there? The magic words are "the Convention of 1818."

On October 20, 1818, a treaty or convention was concluded between His Britannic Majesty and the United States of America, cleaning up some old "hang-over" disputes resulting from the War of 1812 between the United States and Great Britain. These included such things as property and damage claims; settling the boundary line between western Canada and the United States; settling old quarrels with Newfoundland fishermen, arising out of the custom of our Grand Banks salt-cod fishermen going ashore on the desolate, uninhabited coast of Newfoundland to salt and dry their fish before putting them back aboard their boats to bring them to Boston, Gloucester, or Portland.

AN OLD FISHING TREATY

Article I settled that matter finally, and it is quoted here in full, the other articles being about other things:

CONVENTION OF 1818

ARTICLE I

Whereas differences have arisen respecting the liberty claimed by the United States for the inhabitants thereof, to take, dry, and cure fish on certain coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of His Britannic Majesty's Dominions in America, it is agreed between the high contracting parties that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have forever, in common with the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands, on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks from Mount Joly on the southern coast of Labrador, to and through the Straits of Belleisle and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson Bay Co.; and that the American fishermen shall also have liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland hereabove described, and of the coast of Labrador; but so soon as the same, or any portion thereof, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled, without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground. And the United States hereby renounce forever, any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof, to take, dry, or cure fish on, or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's Dominions in America not included within the above-mentioned limits: Provided, however, That the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, or purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them.

This simply worded treaty means just what it says, no more, and—United States Treasury officials please note—does not mention or imply any shore station. It merely is a grant of a privilege by Great Britain to the fishermen of the United States. It permits them to take fish on the coasts of Newfoundland between specified points; it also grants them the right to go into the unsettled bays, and so forth, within these boundaries, to dry and cure their fish; but when these regions are settled the permission of the settlers must be obtained. The United States renounces the right to go ashore anywhere else to dry or cure fish, but may do so for fuel, water, repairs, and so forth. The treaty clarified the issue by permitting inhabitants of the United States to fish, cure, and so forth, in certain parts of the coast, and prohibiting them to do so elsewhere.

The United States assumes no obligation whatever by the terms of this treaty—certainly nothing in it guarantees to admit the fish duty free into this country. If, outside this treaty, any consideration was granted or given to Great Britain by the United States in return for the privileges granted to the United States, it was, in any event, to benefit American, not foreign, fishermen. It remained a purely domestic question with us whether the temporary landing of American fish in Newfoundland would make it dutiable here. Since only American fishermen were involved from beginning to end, the British, of course, were not concerned with any rules we might make governing our own fishermen. But, obviously, since the operations were truly American from beginning to end, the fish would not be dutiable.

INTENDED FOR "SAIL" ERA

An understanding of the conditions prevailing in 1818 will make it easier to understand the intent of the treaty. In 1818 only sail was used to propel ships. Steam and gasoline engines were unknown. Artificial refrigeration was not developed until 75 years later—even ice did not come into use for temporary preservation of fish for another 20 years.

Fishing schooners, known as salt bankers, loaded up at Gloucester, Boston, or Portland with food, salt, dories, hooks, and lines. Two men manned each dory rowboat. They went to the Grand Bank off Newfoundland, and other banks or shallow places, where the dorymen rowed out from the schooner and fished with hand lines. They brought their fish daily to the mother schooner, split and salted them down in the hold until they had a load. In that foggy, cold climate the process was difficult. The fish needed spreading out on rocks in the air in order to dry. This is what "dry and cure" means. There was not enough room on the deck of the ship—hence the great convenience of being allowed to go ashore to do this drying. When the season's catch of fish was again all stowed away below, the schooner and crew returned to Gloucester, Boston, or Portland.

ONLY AN EXCUSE

The 1818 treaty quoted and explained above turns out to be the flimsy excuse seized upon by an American company, with the apparent approval of our Treasury Department, to operate a completely alien and foreign subsidized enterprise in Newfoundland and still bring its product into this country duty-free. A word in the law here, a slight change in the Treasury Department decisions there, and the whole thing is miles away from the original intent of the treaty. What was meant to be a convenience to our sail and salt-cod fishermen in 1818 turns out to be the means of enabling a wealthy corporation to operate steam trawlers with Newfoundland fishermen, to employ Newfoundland fishermen in their own boats to catch fish, employ Newfoundland labor to operate an elaborate plant, with refrigerating and quick-freezing machinery powered by Diesel engines and electric motors, to fillet and package in cellophane and transport to the United States in steam- and Diesel-powered refrigerated ships, manned by Newfoundland crews, and to enter our markets duty-free.

Here is how this astonishing and disturbing development came about: First, as said, the fishing operations comprehended in the treaty were 100-percent American. The boats were American built and owned in Maine and Massachusetts; the masters and crews were American; their catch was, of course, American; the crews that caught the fish also split and salted them at sea and dried them when they went ashore; then they brought their catch home in their own boats. The fish never were anything but American, and so, of course, could not be assessed any duty.

A TECHNICALITY

But there remained the technicality that the fish, before being brought into the United States, actually had been in Newfoundland, so, just to make it sure, it seemed to the Congress of 1930 desirable to state specifically in the tariff law that this fact was not to be construed so as to alienate the fish and make them dutiable.

This provision is found in the present tariff law:

Art. 489. Free entry authorized.—Definition. (a) Tariff Act of 1930, paragraph 1730 (a) (free list):

All products of American fisheries (including fish, shellfish, and other marine animals, and spermaceti, whale, fish, and other marine animal oils) which have not been landed in a foreign country or which, if so landed, have been landed solely for transshipment without change in condition: Provided, That fish the product of American fisheries (except cod, haddock, hake, pollock, cusk, mackerel, and swordfish) landed in a foreign country and there not further advanced than beheaded, eviscerated, packed in ice, frozen, and with fins removed, shall be exempt from duty: Provided further, That products of American fisheries prepared or preserved by an American fishery on the treaty coasts of Newfoundland, Magdalen Islands, and Labrador, as such coasts are defined in the convention of 1818 between the United States and Great Britain, shall be exempt from duty.

CAMEL "NOSES INTO TENT"

Here the camel of foreign competition first puts the tip of his nose in the tent. First, the law says the obvious, that American fishing boats can land their fish in the United States without paying duty. It also says that they may do so if their catch has been landed in a foreign port purely for shipment by rail or vessel to the United States.

DEEPER INTO TENT

But, then, the nose of the camel gets a little further into the tent, for it is provided that the product of American fisheries, if it is not cod, haddock, hake, pollock, cusk, mackerel, or swordfish, cannot only be landed but can also be beheaded, gutted, packed in ice, frozen, and fins cut off and still enter the United States without paying duty. This permits western fishermen of salmon, halibut, ling, and black cod to land their catches at Prince Rupert or Vancouver, British Columbia, and do all this preparation and preservation, including freezing, by foreign labor and then ship them to the United States free of duty.

But Atlantic coast fishermen cannot land and preserve their catches at Halifax or Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, because all of the important North Atlantic species of fishes are forbidden this privilege by law. This is peculiar phraseology at best. If the intent was, as appears, to permit western fishermen the convenience of landing salmon and halibut at Prince Rupert, to which our New England fishermen would have no objection, one would expect the law to grant this privilege to salmon and halibut by name and to forbid it to all others. But it is in reverse; it permits this privilege to any kind of fish whatever produced anywhere, except cod, haddock, and so forth—all the important North Atlantic species—which are denied it. Not that it makes so much difference in itself, for on this coast fishermen have had no great need to land in the Canadian ports, and Canadian laws forbid it, anyway; the important thing is that this provision of the law, designed for western fishermen, provides a shadow of excuse for the Treasury, by its decisions and interpretations, to let the whole camel into the tent, as we shall see.

MAY "DRY AND CURE"

The final proviso of the law puts fish from the treaty shore of Newfoundland on the free list, but where the treaty of 1818 permitted American fishermen to "dry and cure" their fish on that coast, the tariff law of 1930 says they may be "prepared or preserved," and it does not say what "prepared or preserved" means, nor does it say whether the work of preparation or preservation must be done by the American crews of the landing boats or whether it may be done by foreigners. It does say, however, that this duty-free privilege extends only to the products of American fisheries, but it does not say what an American fishery is. It therefore becomes necessary—that is, necessary to the pending Newfoundland deal—for the Treasury Department to supply the missing definitions and interpretations, and here is where the whole camel creeps bodily into the tent.

A STUDY IN PARALLELS

The Treasury Decisions, article 489, interpreting paragraph 1730 (a), Tariff Act of 1930, as they stood in Customs Regulations, 1937, are shown in the left-hand column below. On August 12, 1938, a new set of definitions and interpretations of (b), (c), (d), and (f) was issued as Treasury Decisions 49682 and appears in the right-hand parallel column below:

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS, 1937

(b) Fish or other marine products taken in American waters or on the high seas by American vessels or by residents of the United States, whether Americans or aliens, in undocumented vessels and brought into port by the vessel taking the same are not imported from a foreign port and no entry therefore is required.

(c) American fishery within the meaning of said paragraph is defined as a fishery operated under the American flag by American vessels in foreign waters, in which such vessels have the right, by treaty or otherwise, to take fish and other marine products.

(d) The employment of foreign fishermen either as members of the crew or under the supervision of the master or crew of an American vessel is allowed. The purchase by the owner, agent, master, or crew of an American vessel, of fish or other marine products taken by the citizens of another country in foreign waters will subject such fish or other marine products to treatment as foreign merchandise.

(f) Marine products taken by American vessels will be entitled to free entry, although prepared, preserved, or otherwise changed in condition on board an American vessel, provided the work is done by the master and crew of such vessel, or by persons employed by them for the purpose.

TREASURY DECISION 49682

August 12, 1938

(b) No entry is required for fish or other marine products taken on the high seas by vessels of the United States or by residents of the United States in undocumented vessels owned in the United States, when such fish or other products are brought into port by the taking vessel.

(c) An American fishery, within the meaning of paragraph 1730 (a), is defined as a fishing enterprise conducted under the American flag by vessels of the United States on the high seas or in foreign waters in which such vessels have the right, by treaty or otherwise, to take fish or other marine products and may include a shore station operated in conjunction with such vessels by the owner or master thereof.

(d) The employment of citizens of a foreign country by an American fishery is permissible but the purchase by an American fishery of fish or other marine products, taken by citizens of a foreign country on the high seas or in foreign waters, will subject such fish or other marine products to treatment as foreign merchandise.

(f) Products of an American fishery will be entitled to free entry although prepared, preserved, or otherwise changed in condition provided the work is done at sea by the master or crew of the fishery or by persons employed by and under the supervision of the master or owner of the fishery. Fish (except cod, haddock, hake, pollock, cusk, mackerel, and swordfish) the product of an American fishery, landed in a foreign country, and there not further advanced than beheaded, eviscerated, packed in ice, frozen and with fins removed, will be entitled to free entry, whether or not such processing is done by the American fishery. Products of an American fishery prepared or preserved on the treaty coasts of Newfoundland, Magdalen Islands, or Labrador, as such coasts are defined in the convention of 1818 between the United States and Great Britain will be entitled to free entry only if the preparation or preservation is done by an American fishery.

In the new decision (b) is changed in appearance but not in fact. The offensive words "whether Americans or aliens" are left out, but the paragraph means the same thing as it did before.

ABOUT THE "SHORE STATION"

In paragraph (c) is made the all-important change of adding the words "and may include a shore station operated in conjunction with such vessels by the owner or master thereof." No such privilege existed in or was contemplated by the Treaty of 1818, nor does it exist in any act of Congress. It is a bit of important legislation enacted by the Treasury. The operation of "drying and curing" of 1818 is now "preparing or preserving" and "American fishermen" who received the privilege in the Treaty of 1818 now become by act of the Treasury Department "master or owner" and the owner may live in New York if he likes. And, in the case of the Newfoundland deal, the owner is the great New York corporation of General Foods Corporation.

Paragraph (d) is not changed materially but smoothed out and made to sound better by changing "foreign fishermen" into "citizens of a foreign country." This paragraph really did not need any change to fit the Newfoundland deal, which seems evidenced when we compare to subclauses 2 (b) and 3 (c) of the General Sea Foods Corporation Act A. D. 1939, No. 49.

TREASURY DECISION 49682

August 12, 1938

(d) The employment of citizens of a foreign country by an American fishery is permissible, but the purchase by an American fishery of fish or other marine products taken by citizens of a foreign country on the high seas or in foreign waters will subject such fish or other marine products to treatment as foreign merchandise.

GENERAL SEA FOODS CORPORATION ACT

December 6, 1939

(2) (b) That the company shall acquire, either by the takings of fishermen employed by it or by purchase from Newfoundland fishermen, fishing vessels, or fish dealers, or by both, in each year of operation, a quantity of marine products equivalent in weight to the quantity of marine products landed at its shore stations by the company's trawlers (such quantity of marine products being hereinafter referred to as "the nontrawler quota"). The nontrawler quota shall be marine products: (i) taken from the sea otherwise than by trawler; (ii) other than salmon, lobsters, scallops, crabs, squid, or caplin; and (iii) other than herring, except that herring taken for food purposes may be included in any nontrawler quota exceeding 10,000,000 pounds, but only to the extent of not more than 10 percent of the excess of such quota over 10,000,000 pounds. During the period preceding the first year of operations the company shall, if it is reasonably possible to do so, conform to the nontrawler quota.

(3) (c) That the company shall at all times pay fair wages to all persons employed by it in the operation of the American fishing enterprise covered by this lease and the general agreement, and, in particular, that the wage rates of such employees shall be not less favorable than those generally paid in Newfoundland in similar employments; that fishermen employed (with or without their boats and gear) by the company shall be guaranteed a minimum daily wage and shall be paid in addition a bonus based upon their production; and that both shore station employees and fishermen employees shall be entitled, to the same extent as is the case with fishermen and shore employees employed by said General Seafoods Corporation at its shore station in Boston in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and United States of America, to the benefits of the industrial relations policy set forth in the publication entitled "Employee Relations in General Foods," published the 19th day of April A. D. 1937 (a copy of which has been deposited with the Government), as in effect on the date hereof or as may be from time to time hereinafter amended:

DOES NOT BUY

Here we see that the American corporation need not "buy" but "acquires" and does not pay a price, but "guarantees a minimum wage," and pays a "bonus" based upon production. This makes the Newfoundland deal fit the law so as to admit the fish duty-free into the United States. Perhaps the records of the Treasury or State Departments may reveal who is responsible for this too-clever juggling of words, opening the door to future competition with American fisheries.

But to return to the Treasury decisions. That first sentence of paragraph (f) of the new Treasury decision adds the "owner" to the "master" and removes the crew, as persons who may supervise the preparation, preservation, and so forth, aboard the vessel, without making the product dutiable. Furthermore, the Treasury decision is again changed to fit the General Seafoods deal, which provides for the employment of Newfoundland crews exclusively. The second sentence of the new paragraph in the Treasury decision (right, below) goes well beyond the law (left):

TARIFF ACT, 1930

Paragraph 1730

Provided, That fish the product of American fisheries (except cod, haddock, hake, pollock, cusk, mackerel, and swordfish) landed in a foreign country and there not further advanced than beheaded, eviscerated, packed in ice, frozen, and with fins removed, shall be exempt from duty.

TREASURY DECISION

August 12, 1938

(f) * * * Fish (except cod, haddock, hake, pollock, cusk, mackerel, and swordfish) the product of an American fishery, landed in a foreign country, and there not further advanced than beheaded, eviscerated, packed in ice, frozen and with fins removed, will be entitled to free entry, whether or not such processing is done by the American fishery.

The Treasury says that operations ashore need not be an American fishery at all for any sea products other than cod, haddock, pollock, hake, cusk, mackerel, and swordfish. This interpretation seems to be the intent of the law. Lobsters, scallops, salmon, and the like, the product of an American fishery, can be dressed, iced, or frozen in a foreign country by foreign labor, and yet enter the United States duty free. But an American fishery, according to (c) and (d), includes a shore station which need be only operated by the "owner or master" of a vessel flying the United States flag, and may employ foreign labor, and the fishermen may be foreign, too, as long as they are paid "wages and bonuses" and fish are not "bought" from them.

IF DONE BY AMERICANS

Likewise, the last sentence of paragraph (f) says that products of an American fishery (including cod, haddock, etc.) from the Newfoundland treaty coast are entitled to free entry "only if the preparation or preservation is done by an American fishery." This is the first time that Newfoundland treaty shore fisheries have been mentioned in Treasury Department decisions. To get the force of it, compare:

THE LAW (TARIFF ACT, 1930, ART. 489)

August 12, 1938

(f) Products of an American fishery prepared or preserved on the treaty coasts of Newfoundland, Magdalen Islands, or Labrador, as such coasts are defined in the Convention of 1818, between the United States and Great Britain will be entitled to free entry only if the preparation or preservation is done by an American fishery.

the American flag by vessels of the United States on the high seas or in foreign waters in which such vessels have the right, by treaty or otherwise, to take fish or other marine products and may include a shore station operated in conjunction with such vessels by the owner or master thereof.

Reduced to its simplest terms, this new decision says that anybody anywhere who owns, charters, or hires a boat which flies the American flag and carries on a fishing enterprise anywhere it has a right to take anything out of the sea, is an American fishery. The shore station has been added and it need not be owned, but rather this made-to-order Treasury Decision No. 49,682 says is sufficient only that it be operated by the owner or master of the vessel. The owner may be a foreigner, he may be merely a charterer of the vessel, as well as a foreigner, in which case the master may operate the shore plant.

PART OF AMERICAN FISHERY

Before August 12, 1938, foreigners could be employed in the crew of an American vessel but since August 12, 1938, they may also be employed in the shore station, because the shore station either owned or merely operated by the owner or master of the vessel is part of an American fishery.

Continuing with the Treasury decision:

BEFORE AUGUST 12, 1938
Article 489

(d) The employment of foreign fishermen either as members of the crew or under the supervision of the master or crew of an American vessel is allowed. The purchase by the owner, agent, master, or crew of an American vessel of fish or other marine products taken by the citizens of another country in foreign waters will subject such fish or other marine products to treatment as foreign merchandise.

SINCE AUGUST 12, 1938
(T. D. 49682)

(d) The employment of citizens of a foreign country by an American fishery is permissible, but the purchase by an American fishery of fish or other marine products taken by citizens of a foreign country on the high seas or in foreign waters will subject such fish or other marine products to treatment as foreign merchandise.

DECISION DOVETAILS PERFECTLY

This decision dovetails perfectly into the Newfoundland deal, which is to employ only Newfoundlanders at sea, in the shore plant, and in transporting the product to the United States.

FROM THE GENERAL SEAFOODS CORPORATION ACT, NEWFOUNDLAND, NO. 49, DECEMBER 6, 1939

Lease, clause 5 (3):

(a) That to the extent that the same are reasonably available, only Newfoundland citizens resident at the time in Newfoundland shall be employed in the company's shore stations, with the exception of the managerial and supervisory staffs thereof.

(b) That to the extent that the same are reasonably available, only Newfoundland citizens resident at the time in Newfoundland shall be employed by the company in its boats or vessels engaged in fishing out of Newfoundland or in carrying merchandise from Newfoundland to the United States of America or elsewhere, with the exception of such officers or members of the crews as may be required by the laws of the country of registry to be citizens thereof.

NO AMERICANS WANTED

By a circuitous route the Treasury has now arrived at a definition of an American fishery as a foreign fishery in which the employment of American labor is forbidden.

It is now possible for an American corporation or anybody else who owns or charters a boat under the American flag to send one trawler or dragger to Newfoundland with Americans only as the officers required by United States law to be licensed; the crew are all required to be Newfoundlanders. It is an "American fishery," and may operate but need not own, a shore plant subsidized and built by the Newfoundland Government at a rent of 5 percent and no depreciation to be charged. In this plant all the labor, except supervisors, must be Newfoundland citizens, and they work at low Newfoundland wages, and these wages paid in depreciated Newfoundland currency. In the United States, fishermen and workers are entitled to the privilege of working if they are residents. In this deal they must be Newfoundland citizens.

The corporation can then go ahead and hire all the Newfoundland fishermen and boats it likes, guarantee them $1 per day and a bonus of so much per pound for the fish they catch. This avoids "buying" fish and permits the product to come into the United States duty free—all in the name of the Convention of 1818. The dollars guaranteed as wages and paid as bonuses are Newfoundland dollars worth at the present writing, 87 American cents. The finished product is then shipped to the United States in boats whose crews are all Newfoundlanders and entered duty free.

But, one might say, these privileges are free to any and all American companies which might wish to take advantage of them. So far as the United States Treasury is concerned, this is true. But competition from others is shut off by other Newfoundland expedients.

FIRST "GET YOUR $200,000"

In the first place, to carry on a similar enterprise, another company would first have to raise $200,000. If it could sell 5-percent bonds in this amount, it would have to pay 5-percent interest. But it would also have to depreciate the property by at least another 5 percent in order to pay off the bonds when they mature. In the General Seafoods deal, the corporation pays only 5 percent as rent, and no depreciation; if it decides to quit, it pays back to Newfoundland only half of the investment less any and all rent already paid. This would be equivalent, in the case of a bond issue, to the privilege of canceling all outstanding bonds at any time, by paying back one-half of their face value less interest paid to date. A fine market for such bonds.

IRONCLAD SAFEGUARDS

However, the attorneys for the General Seafoods Corporation did a most workmanlike job in persuading the government of Newfoundland to issue many other iron-clad safeguards against possible competition. Following are some of the rights granted exclusively to General Seafoods Corporation as quoted directly from the Act No. 49 itself:

5. (1) The Government agrees:

(a) That no discriminatory law or regulation (whether special or general in form) for the control, restriction, regulation, or taxation of the company or its property or business shall be enacted or enforced; and

(b) That no export or import duty or any other tax (excepting only any export tax of general application on salt fish levied expressly for promoting the Newfoundland industry) even though of general application, shall be assessed upon or collected from the company in respect of marine products landed at the shore station, or in respect of such products and/or any byproducts thereof (with or without packaging) shipped overseas from the shore station, or in respect of vessels, boats, and/or gear comprised in the American fishery to be established under this agreement; and

(c) That no present or future law or regulation, even though of general application, with respect to immigration into Newfoundland, shall be so enforced or construed as to prevent the employment by the company at the shore station of a managerial and supervisory staff of other than Newfoundland citizens and residents, or the employment upon its vessels of such citizens of the United States of America as the laws thereof may require; and

(d) (i) That no present or future law or regulation even though of general application shall be so enforced or construed as to exclude from trading between Newfoundland points, vessels documented under the laws of the United States of America and owned, leased, or chartered and operated by the company so long as they carry coastwise no cargo except goods the property of the company received on board at or for delivery to a shore station of the company and as long as the company operated one or more shore stations in Newfoundland and is liable to taxation in Newfoundland;

(ii) That no such law or regulation shall be so enforced or construed as to subject such vessels trading as in 5 (1) (d) (i) above or trading between Newfoundland and foreign ports to more onerous terms, conditions, or taxation than those to which vessels operated in like manner may be subjected being of Newfoundland registry and operated by a person, firm, or corporation of Newfoundland nationality so long as such vessels trading as aforesaid do not, except with the consent of the Government from time to time, carry from Newfoundland any cargo except goods the property of the company received on board at a shore station of the company.

(2) Subject to the foregoing and to the provisions of clauses 6 and 7 hereof, it is agreed that all Newfoundland laws or regulations of general application, whether now or hereafter in force, shall apply to the company.

6. No import duty or other tax shall be assessed or collected upon the importation into Newfoundland by the company of any of the following personal property necessary to the building, finishing, or fitting of the shore station pursuant to subclauses (2) and (6) of clause 3 hereof, or to the erection of additional buildings and structures or the installation of additional machinery and fixtures pursuant to subclauses (9) and (10) respectively, of said clause (but not in substitution of new for old), namely: plans, specifications, drawings, building materials (except the following: lumber of all kinds and sizes produced in Newfoundland; wooden windows, doors, and casings therefor, sashes, moldings, stairs, and the like millwork obtainable in Newfoundland in sizes, of qualities, and at prices satisfactory to the company; nails, and paints), tools (except hand tools), furniture, fixtures, and machinery (including office furniture, fixtures, and machinery); and equipment: Provided, however, That the duty concessions granted by this clause 6 shall continue for the term of this agreement.

7. For the period of 22 years next following the completion of the shore station pursuant to subclause (2) of clause 3 hereof and notwithstanding any present or future law or regulation with respect to import duties and the draw-back thereof, the company shall, upon production of proof of exportation, be entitled to receive from the Government the draw-back of 100 percent of the Newfoundland import duty paid upon all unglazed kraft paper, cardboard, or corrugated paper containers, waxed and parchment papers, transparent cellulose wrapping papers, labels, strapping wire, excelsior packing, show cards, advertising material, and other packing materials shown by the company to have been imported and used by the company in the packing and exportation of marine products or byproducts thereof or of food products (other than sea foods) of Newfoundland origin processed at the shore station or on board any vessel of the company comprised in the American fishing enterprise covered by this agreement.

10. The Government agrees that the rights, privileges, and immunities inuring to the company under clauses 5, 6, and 7 hereof by virtue of and with respect to the principal shore station covered by this agreement shall also inure to the company by virtue of and with respect to any one or more additional shore stations which the company, with the prior approval in writing of the Government in each instance, may purchase, lease, or otherwise acquire.

DENY RIGHTS TO OTHERS

An equally thorough job was done in the matter of denying rights to all others who might seek to do what is so graphically and perhaps inelegantly described as seeking to "muscle in."

RIGHTS DENIED TO ALL OTHERS

8. For the period of 3 years next following the date of this agreement, unless the company shall have forfeited its rights hereunder at any earlier date, no Government moneys shall be expended in the assistance of any United States of America, person, firm, or corporation (whether operating directly or operating indirectly through another person, firm, or corporation) in financing the erection or operation of a plant, either afloat or ashore, for the handling, freezing, or processing of marine products for food purposes on that part of the southwest coast of Newfoundland between Ramea and La Poile, both included.

9. (1) The Government agrees that it will not, for the purpose of inducing or aiding the erection or operation of any shore station comparable in kind with the company's shore station within a radius of 15 miles therefrom, and notwithstanding that the company's shore station may be located at or within 15 miles east of La Poile, give to any person, firm, or corporation:

(a) Any financial assistance, or any concession of any kind, either of the general nature of those contained in clauses 6 and 7 hereof or otherwise; or

(b) Any undertaking to restrict the Government's future freedom of action, either of the general nature of those contained in clause 5 hereof or otherwise.

(2) This clause 9 shall be in effect for the period of 22 years next following the commencement of the lease provided for in clause 4 hereof; but it shall not in any event apply to the port of Rose Blanche notwithstanding said port may be within the 15-mile radius above defined.

Thus the United States Treasury has provided duty-free entry for products of an enterprise alien in everything but a small part ownership, alien in all the raw material, alien in practically all the labor, and alien in the fixed capital, while Newfoundland has provided the rest in making it impossible for any other American citizens to avail themselves of our Treasury's generosity.

CAMEL NOW "ALL WAY IN"

The camel is now in the tent—nose, head, neck, body, hoofs, and tail.

How did this amazing situation come about?

Until 1933 Newfoundland was a Dominion of the British Commonwealth of Nations, but got into financial difficulties, and on December 2, 1933, its Parliament voted approval of the recommendations of a British royal commission to relinquish dominion status. A royal commission of government, headed by a Governor, Admiral Sir Humphrey Thomas Walwyn, of the British Navy, took office on February 15, 1934.

In prospectus No. 1244, dated May 4, 1933, filed by General Foods Corporation with the S. E. C., the statement is made that General Foods Corporation planned to spend about $7,000,000 in 1933 from its new preferred stock issue, one of the items of which was given as "approximately $125,000 to be used together with an estimated $200,000 to be advanced by the Province of Newfoundland for construction at La Poile Bay, Newfoundland, of a plant for processing and quick freezing of fish."

ANNOUNCED 2 YEARS AHEAD

There is more significance to that statement than first appears in a reading of a supposedly routine financial statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. We learn the astounding fact that fully 2 years before the formal agreement had been signed General Foods already was confidently counting its chickens—or baby fish—before they had hatched. The company lets the "cat out of the bag" by naming La Poile as the site, despite the fact that the formal agreement 2 years later omits the location, which, under terms of the agreement, is to be decided within 2 months. Furthermore, the company in its S. E. C. prospectus No. 1244 has taken for granted, and fairly definitely so announces, that the Newfoundland Government intended to furnish $200,000.

DEAL NOT IN UNITED STATES OF AMERICA'S INTEREST

The economic aspects will readily show that this deal is not in the interest of the United States or of its citizens. Fish are not among those products that are unobtainable in the United States or obtainable in insufficient quantities to meet our needs. The United States is already the second largest fish-producing country in the world, with an annual yield of over 4,000,000,000 pounds, a value of $100,000,000 annually, and employing 129,544 fishermen. Our fisheries are exceeded only by Japan in volume, but even exceed Japan slightly in value. The statistics of fish production of the principal fishing countries of the world are shown in the following table:

ADDING TO NEWFOUNDLAND'S WEALTH

This deal is not in our interest from the point of view of national wealth. The economics of fish, after they are landed and as they pass through the channels of trade and distribution, do not differ from the economics of other commodities; but in the sources the economics of the fisheries differ from all other commodities. The waters from which ocean fish are taken are not privately owned, they are not even publicly or nationally owned, but are international. Fish are not fed or cultivated and have no value until they are caught. Their value begins to accrue to the fishermen at the time of capture and adds to the national wealth of the home country of the fishermen. Every pound of fish caught on the high seas by American fishermen immediately adds its corresponding value to our national wealth, and it is not a part of our national wealth until it is captured and landed. If it is first landed in Newfoundland by their fishermen and prepared by their labor, it is then Newfoundland national wealth; and if it is imported into the United States, we must buy it from Newfoundland by the payment to Newfoundland of other forms of our own national wealth.

WILL INJURE AMERICAN LABOR

This whole situation, obviously, is directly contrary to the interests of American labor. In the past few days their representatives began their own independent survey of this Newfoundland deal. They were astounded at the details, especially at the so-called fact of an American fishery ruling which prohibits Americans from fishing, doing shore work, transporting goods, and so forth. What their considered opinion of this whole "fishy" deal is may be made known by their leaders after they complete their own investigation.

Because high-seas fish are not privately owned and are subject to no form of control or monopoly, 100 percent of their value when landed represents the labor expended on catching them—including the labor of building, equipping, and supplying boats. Since in both the Canadian and Newfoundland deals it is contemplated to employ almost 100-percent foreign labor both at sea and ashore, the entire pay roll, or value of the fish, will be transferred from American labor to foreign labor. Fisheries labor at Boston is unionized, both at sea and ashore. Newfoundland fisheries labor is unionized neither at sea nor ashore, and fisheries wages are far lower in both Canada and Newfoundland than they are in New England. American fishermen who may be thrown out of a job by reason of General Seafoods' move to Newfoundland cannot even go there to get a job, because the deal requires all employees—except supervisors ashore and officers of vessels—to be citizens resident at the time in Newfoundland.

NO JOBS EVEN FOR THEM

What is even now little realized by labor-union members and the clerical forces ashore is that not even the present staff of employees of the General Seafood Corporation in Boston could obtain jobs on this so-called American fishery.

LIST 19,000 NEW ENGLAND FISHERMEN

According to the latest report of the Bureau of Fisheries, the New England fisheries, with which the Newfoundland and Canadian enterprises compete directly, employ 5,023 fishermen on vessels, and 13,426 men ashore, a total of 18,449; they operate 621 steam and motor vessels with an aggregate of 22,051 tons, and 9,086 boats. This business is simply being thrown away. The seriousness is even greater when we consider the accessory industries—the net and twine workers, cans, boxes and paper, boats and engines and their supplies, ship chandlers, ice and cold storage plants, truckers and railways, shipyards, and all the industry attendant upon fishing. It is no exaggeration to say that the New England fisheries cannot compete with the foreign enterprise herein described.

SEEK CHEAPER LABOR?

The object of these moves to Canada and Newfoundland obviously is in part for the purpose of taking advantage of cheaper labor. This may be illustrated by the relative prices of fish at Boston and in Newfoundland. The approximately average going price of codfish in Newfoundland is about 1 cent—Newfoundland—per pound, gutted and beheaded, or about 0.7 cent—Newfoundland—equivalent to 0.61¼ United States cent per pound gutted with heads on. The prevailing price of codfish at Boston ranges from 2 to 4 cents per pound, gutted, heads on. The difference is in the compensation paid to labor.

LET JAPAN DO IT?

If it is the purpose of our Government to get fish cheaper, we could probably do an even better job by turning all our fisheries over to the Japanese who are willing to work for even lower wages than the Newfoundlanders.

All of this comes at a time when Boston fish production is near its all-time peak of quantity and at the lowest prices since records are available, as the following figures, from the United States Bureau of Fisheries, will show:

(These figures are given for the purpose of showing the trend of prices over a period of years. They are somewhat higher than cod, haddock, etc., alone would be, because they include certain fancy fish like lemon soles, swordfish, etc.)

We are now ready for a little calculation. If one examines the cost of fish in Newfoundland, coupled with the subsidy provided by the Newfoundland deal, and then includes the difference in labor costs between Newfoundland and New England, it will be clear that the total advantage of labor and materials in favor of Newfoundland will be approximately 4.05 cents per pound, without any protective duty whatever, on products selling at from 7 to 15 cents per pound. Producers do not average more than 1 cent per pound gross profit even at these prices.

According to these figures, Canada enjoys a direct advantage in our market of 1.39 cents and Newfoundland an advantage of 4 cents per pound. Canada has the right to bring in 15,000,000 pounds and Newfoundland is planning up to 15,000,000 pounds of fillets, and capable of unlimited expansion, so that total destruction of the New England fisheries is imminent.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST CANADA

Moreover, there is a gross discrimination against Canada in favor of Newfoundland. The trade agreements carry the most-favored-nation clause, but, under the umbrella of the convention of 1818, Newfoundland products will be admitted duty free while Canada will be required to pay a duty of 1½ cents per pound of fillets.

These deals are not in the interest of the conservation of our own natural resources. As a resource ocean fisheries are naturally self-replacing. True, ocean fish can be temporarily reduced in abundance by overfishing, but they cannot be exterminated by fishing for profit, because the profits disappear and the fishermen go bankrupt long before the fish are exterminated. The fish then promptly multiply again. But in another and more important sense transfer of fishing from our vessels to Canada and Newfoundland does not conserve our supply, because Newfoundland, Canada, and the United States all three dip into the same supply on the same banks, and the fish population is the same common stock on all the banks, mingling and intermigrating. In fact, it would be possible for one of these foreign countries to frustrate any scheme of conservation the others might establish by themselves overfishing while we are trying to regulate and conserve. This fact is already recognized by the Bureau of Fisheries in holding international conferences with these countries looking toward conservation of high-seas fisheries, and the International Halibut Commission on the Pacific coast has been in existence for several years for the purpose of conserving the high-seas stock of halibut.

AGAINST PUBLIC HEALTH

The deal is not in the interest of public health. At Boston the fishing vessels and shore operations are subject to the strict health and sanitary regulations, not only of Federal authority but by the State and municipal authorities as well. Within the past year all these authorities have been aggressive in the enforcement of sanitary regulations in the New England fisheries, and large quantities of fish have been condemned, including several large lots produced by one of the largest corporations.

Toilet facilities, the floors, containers, and implements must conform to rigid standards, and fish must be kept covered and protected from the weather. On the desolate shore of Newfoundland none of these standards, nor provisions for enforcing compliance, exist. The products themselves are of course subject to inspection at the port of entry into the United States but obviously it is impossible to enforce all the above requirements merely on the frozen, packaged goods themselves.

These foreign deals are contrary to the interests of the invested capital in the United States in shore stations, machinery, vessels, and equipment, most of which companies are having a hard time meeting their pay rolls and paying the taxes demanded of them by a Government which seemingly goes out of its way to build up foreign competition.

SERIOUS FOR NEW ENGLAND FISHERIES

Without considering for the moment the precedent that is being established, the volume of production in immediate contemplation by these two moves to Canada and Newfoundland is serious for the New England fisheries. The Canadian plant at Caraquet, New Brunswick, will have a capacity at the beginning of 50,000 pounds per day, or 10,000,000 pounds of fillets per year of 200 working days. The Newfoundland plant is provided with working space for 30,000,000 pounds of marine products, and is definitely committed to 15,000,000 pounds in the third year. Since, in Newfoundland the figures refer to whole fish, we may assume that 7,500,000 pounds would be finished products, or a total of 17,500,000 pounds in Canada and Newfoundland at an early date, or 22.4 percent of the total New England production. There is little doubt, that, with all the advantages of low wages, and capital charges, duty concessions and the like, this quantity, and a great deal more, can be sold in this country.

DANGEROUS PRECEDENTS

Even more serious are the precedents established. If these plants achieve initial success, they can be expanded, Canada up to 15,000,000 pounds per year, and Newfoundland indefinitely, with the way open for the establishment of any number of additional plants which, with relatively small amounts of foreign subsidy, can attract enough business from the United States to destroy the New England fisheries. If this eventuality is not desired, the time to stop it is now, to avoid the embarrassment and hard feelings that will be aroused by stopping it later, after our neighboring governments have committed themselves and the business concerns have built up their organizations and sales connections.

THREE SOLUTIONS

And now, in conclusion, we shall consider three possible fields of action to remedy this potentially dangerous situation—for American fishermen will not long be content to compete against an imitation American fishery—which is one in name only and totally alien in fact.

First of all, section 303 of the Tariff Act should be applied so as to countervail the bounties and subsidies granted to fish in both Canada and Newfoundland, including subsidies granted in the form of capital investment in plants.

Secondly, the data here presented shows that such methods as being practiced now, and those in immediate prospect both in Canada and Newfoundland—especially the latter—are unfair competition against our own fisheries. To meet such a situation, Section 337 of the Tariff Act provides, as follows:

CUSTOMS REGULATIONS, 1937

Unfair competition

Art. 663. Unfair methods of competition declared unlawful—Tariff Act of 1930, section 337 (a):

Unfair methods of competition and unfair acts in the importation of articles into the United States, or in their sale by the owner, importer, consignee, or agent of either, the effect or tendency of which is to destroy or substantially injure an industry, efficiently and economically operated, in the United States, or to prevent the establishment of such an industry, or to restrain or monopolize trade and commerce in the United States, are hereby declared unlawful, and when found by the President to exist shall be dealt with, in addition to any other provisions of law, as hereinafter provided.

Art. 664. Exclusion of articles from entry.—Tariff Act of 1930, section 337 (e):

Whenever the existence of any such unfair method or act shall be established to the satisfaction of the President he shall direct that the articles concerned in such unfair methods or acts, imported by any person violating the provisions of this act, shall be excluded from entry into the United States, and upon information of such action by the President, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, through the proper officers, refuse such entry. The decision of the President shall be conclusive.

If there ever were a case of unfair practice calling for the invocation of this provision of the law, this Newfoundland deal certainly is it.

LET FISHERMEN BE HEARD

The third solution, which is the simplest, easiest, and most just method of aid to the real American fishery industry, calls for immediate rescinding of the official Treasury decision ruling about shore stations.

On August 12, 1938, the Department promulgated its special Treasury Decision No. 49,682 and thus amended and reinterpreted section 1730 (a) of the 1930 Tariff Act. No real reason existed then or now for any such revision by the Treasury of its interpretation of paragraph 1730 except that a printed brief was submitted to the Treasury Department by the General Seafoods Corporation. This specifically asked for changes in the interpretation of the Tariff Act to fit their Newfoundland deal. The revised interpretations of the duty-free fisheries paragraph 1730 (a) of the Tariff Act of 1930 were thereafter tailored-to-order to make the monopolistic Newfoundland deal possible. This brief was held confidential by the Treasury and was finally revealed only after House Resolution No. 361 was filed by me. The Treasury Department replied a week later, admitting that General Seafoods had filed this brief, which asked point blank, and subsequently obtained, many favorable rulings.

MUST BE RESCINDED AT ONCE

To express it mildly, the whole proceeding was most unusual and not often followed by the United States Treasury Department without public hearing or any notice to interested parties. A group of six Members of the House of Representatives are joining in asking that this Treasury Decision 49,682 be rescinded at once out of fairness to all other fishing interests and fishermen. [Applause.]

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BATES].

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] had to say today in respect to the interpretation placed on the fishing industry by the Treasury Department, is of quite some interest to many Members from New England, and particularly from that section in New England that has large fishing industries. Within my district is the city of Gloucester, perhaps the oldest fishing center in the United States, its history running away back to colonial days, and coming up through that span of years during which that industry in that community has provided employment for a large number of its inhabitants. Today, according to the information that I have from the Department of Labor at the state house in Boston, the record shows that 45 percent of all of the industrial workers in that city are engaged in the fishing industry. We can well understand what is going to happen to that city and the fishing industry if such a thing of this character is permitted to pass without protest. Here we have a situation where a decision of the court has been practically overruled and rescinded by the Treasury Department, that has defined the law to mean that the fishing industry in this country may organize capital and go into a foreign country, establish a plant there and hire foreign labor, and then transport the products of that industry to this country without duty, because they interpret it is an American industry. While I do not know any more than the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] knows what the reason is for the interpretation now placed on the law by the Treasury Department, we do know that under a reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada, the import duty on fish, particularly filleted fish, was reduced from 2½ cents a pound to 1⅞ cents a pound. The imports of filleted fish, and the effect they have on our domestic market, are of interest to us, as the imports of all other products are in their effect on the American market and the various industries of the country. Let me show what has happened under this so-called reciprocal-trade agreement and the lowering of duty on imported fish.

In 1932 the total amount of imported filleted fish in the cod-haddock-hake classification was 1,782,000. That amount gradually increased year after year until 1939, when it reached the record total of 15,649,000 pounds, the largest amount ever imported in the history of the country, according to a report from the Tariff Commission. This shows an increase in a period of 7 years of 778 percent in filleted fish within that classification. I am wondering just what is going to happen to the fishing industry of Massachusetts, of Boston, of Gloucester, also of Maine, if we find as a result of the interpretation of the law that these American interests can go to Newfoundland and there be subsidized by the Newfoundland Government to the extent of $200,000 with which to build a new plant on the condition that they employ nothing but Newfoundland labor to catch the fish, to dress the fish, and then transport them here to the United States.

According to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the understanding is that a minimum of 30,000,000 pounds of fish shall be filleted under that agreement. One-half of that is really good fish—edible fish. So it seems that instead of 15,000,000 pounds that came in here in 1939, compared with 1,700,000 pounds in 1932, we are going to expect in the near future, as soon as this new plant is constructed, a doubling up of the present imports within that particular classification. When that happens, we will find that the imports will be doubled over 1939 and will equal 30,000,000 pounds. This will be the equivalent of 30 percent of the entire domestic production in the United States.

It has been called to my attention by those who are in position to understand something about the rate of wages paid Newfoundland fishery workers that the fishery workers there receive anywhere from 6 to 10 cents an hour. I am wondering, when we let the bars down entirely and permit these fish to come in here duty free, what the fishery workers in this country and the industry in this country are going to do when they are attempting to place their own products in the American market at a wage rate of 30 to 50 cents an hour.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. I think that is a fair question. Does not the gentleman feel that the same thing will happen to the fishing industry of Boston, Gloucester, and entire New England that has happened to American agriculture? It will ruin it.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Obviously.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. In spite of the reduction of five-eighths of 1 cent that took place in the reciprocal treaty, comparing that with no duty, according to the information we have had from the gentleman from Maine, what will be the protest arising in the city of Gloucester, such as was held last summer at this reduction of five-eighths of a cent? How will they feel now? Will the gentleman tell us something about the protest meeting in Gloucester last summer?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. When a city finds itself in a position where 45 percent of all its industrial workers are employed in one particular type of industry, which in this case is the fishing industry, the officials of that city and the people of the city are necessarily very much concerned about what is going to happen.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] a moment ago inquired as to what the position of the organized workers in New England was insofar as this protest was concerned. I hold in my hand a little pamphlet advertising the remonstrance-day program in the city of Gloucester, a protest meeting held on July 30, 1939, sponsored by the mayor and the city government of that city. The mayor of the city happens to be an outstanding Democrat, so the protest was not of a partisan character. It was a universal, city-wide demonstration of their opposition to the imports of fish that was coming into the American market and strangling the American industry.

I hold in my hand one of the leaflets that the labor organization of fishery workers got out protesting against those imports. Not only was the mayor of the city and the city government listed as speaker, but also we had the president of the Massachusetts State Federation of Labor, the head of the Gloucester Sea Food Workers Union, a representative of the Governor of Massachusetts, the Commissioner of Labor and Industry of Massachusetts, all protesting the importation of fish under the reduced rate agreed to with the Canadian officials under the Canadian reciprocal-trade pact. In the year 1938 the imports of filleted fish were 9,400,000 pounds, and under the reciprocal-trade reduction of five-eighths of a cent a pound, over 15,600,000 pounds came in in 1939. Obviously that city is very much concerned about the situation, because they have no other place to turn for the employment of their people.

We know the general situation existing in the industrial centers of Massachusetts, and we want to protect these industries for the jobs that they give our American men and women. When we barter down the river the rights of these workers and give away our market to foreign exporters, even though they may go under the guise of American industries, we are just ruining the industry, which we here in Congress are trying to stimulate by various methods.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman state to us, if possible, what percentage of the fish catch under this so-called Newfoundland deal will be imported into the United States? It will be at least 95 percent, will it not? Practically all of the catch up there is imported into the United States?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. The market is the United States. I mentioned a moment ago that the imports in 1939 were about 15,000,000 pounds, as compared with 9,000,000 pounds in 1938. I am informed also that in recent months 5,000,000 pounds that were destined to the United States were shipped across to England apparently for war uses; and if it were not for that, we could have added another 5,000,000 to the 15,600,000 which would have been imported in 1939, or a total of over 20,000,000, against 9,400,000 pounds in 1938.

Mr. CONNERY. Those sea-food products of these Newfoundland workers will come into this country and be detrimental to the best interests of the workers of our own fishing industry here. Is it not true that but a very small percentage of the fish caught under this arrangement will be consumed in Canada?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Naturally; because the United States is the market for which the organization is constructing its plants. They will, of course, absorb our American market and wreck the price structure. It will ruin the market into which the products of our own fishing industry must go.

There will be no hope for the American fisheries if this particular situation develops to the point that the gentleman from Maine feels it will develop. There is no hope for the American fisheries if we do not find some way by which to bring back the 2½ cents a pound import duty instead of continuing the reduction to 1 7/8 cents a pound that the trade agreement with Canada put into effect only a short time ago.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. The gentleman realizes, does he not, that, in addition to the reduction in duty and this finagling that has gone on between the General Sea Foods Corporation and the United States, there is also at the present time a discount in Canadian exchange equal to something like 10 1/2 percent? This in itself does away with any tariff there might be.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Depreciation of currencies merely aggravates our situation.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in closing I would remind the Committee that only a short time ago Congress appropriated $1,000,000 to buy the surplus fish then existing on the American market; yet we find that as a result of the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada imports of fish have increased from 9,000,000 pounds in 1932 to over 15,000,000 pounds in 1939. Unless we find some way of stopping this situation we shall have to do one of two things, necessarily: Either close down our American fisheries, or appropriate more money to buy the surplus fish of our own fishermen.

Mr. HAWKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HAWKS. When is the Congress of the United States going to tell these bureaucrats they have got to follow the laws laid down by Congress? That is the only way we can get proper action.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Not only is a reduction of the tariff very dangerous, as I have shown, but when we wipe out the tariff altogether and permit these fish to come in here duty free under this most recent interpretation of the Treasury Department, we might as well write "finis" to the American fishing industry we have labored so long to build up and maintain in these great United States. [Applause.]

Attached is a complete schedule of the imports of certain species of fish affecting the New England fishing industry. It is of particular interest to note that in 1932 the imports on filleted cod, haddock, hake, pollock, and cusk were 1,782,000 pounds, while in 1939 they increased to 15,649,000 pounds, an increase of 778 percent in 7 years. Notwithstanding the constantly increasing volume of imports since 1932, under the 2 1/2-cents-a-pound duty, the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement with the United States reduced this duty to 1 7/8 cents a pound. The result was a substantial increase in filleted fish in 1939 over 1932. This cannot but help, if continued, to have a ruinous effect on the fishing industry of New England.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE], a member of the committee.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks just preceding, it would appear there is something "fishy" going on in this country. I will not undertake to discuss any of the matters referred to, but in view of the implication in some of the statements that there may be violation of law by someone somewhere in our Government I shall direct my remarks to certain testimony submitted to the subcommittee by representatives of the Department of Justice relative to the increase of crime in the United States.

Mention has been made of yearly increases in appropriations for the Department of Justice. That is true, it is unfortunate, and, in a way, it is regrettable; but when we examine the statistics and find there has been an increase of crime or there have been frequent offenses against society, and insist upon our law-enforcing body to try and enforce the law and prevent crime, increased cost and increased appropriations will necessarily follow. In other words, if we are going to try and reduce crime by prosecuting the offender we may expect the cost of the courts to increase just as long as crime increases. But I want to give it as my opinion that the Department of Justice has done more to break up crime and corruption of the higher types within the past 5 years than any other 5 years of our history.

I was much surprised to find from the testimony of a representative of the Department that in recent years crime has been on the gradual increase. I was somewhat impressed with the particular violations of law, and, while I will not undertake to refer to all of them, I shall refer to just a few. I note, for example, that the number of violations of the liquor law from 1934 increased from 2,208 to 5,432 in 1939. I mean by that they are the violations that were brought to the attention of the Department of Justice and prosecuted in our Federal courts.

Violations of the Narcotics and Drug Acts increased from 1,321 in 1934 to 1,525 in 1939. Violations of the postal regulations increased from 863 in 1934 to 1,173 in 1939. Theft in violation of interstate commerce laws increased from 125 in 1933 to 266 in 1939.

These statistics indicate, Mr. Chairman, that the people of this country apparently have less respect for law and order today than they did in former years, although the increase in number of crimes may be due to some extent to legislation making certain offenses criminal that heretofore were not considered as such. That is, there was a time when some particular offenses against society were not considered criminal but have been made so by recent statutes.

I would also direct attention to the age of the perpetrators of some of these offenses. From the statistics furnished by the Chief of the Bureau of Investigation we find that arrests made for all offenses from January 1 to September 30 last year the percentage committed by persons of various age groups is about as follows: Under 21 years, 19.2 percent; between 25 and 29 years of age, 33.1 percent; between 30 and 39, 25 percent; between 40 and 49, 14 percent; 50 years and over, 8.6 percent; and unknown, one-tenth of 1 percent.

The more distressing thing about these figures is to note that 46.4 percent of the crimes of burglary committed from January 1 to September 30, 1939, were by persons under 21 years of age. In larceny, 33.5 percent were under 21 years of age, and auto thefts 52.9 percent were committed by persons between 16 and 21 years of age. In other words, we find that in a large majority of the offenses brought to the attention of the Department of Justice and prosecuted in the Federal courts, they were by persons under 21 years of age, indicating to the student or to one interested in criminal statistics, that there is something wrong in the effectiveness of our governmental machinery in prosecuting crimes against society or against statutes, or else there is something wrong in the training or education of these young men in early life. Either cause is sufficient to command the attention of Congress and the people of this country.

If the increase in crime among the younger class of our citizens is due to the laxity of our courts, or is due to the failure of our courts to prosecute or to the failure of our courts to perform the functions for which they were created, then it is certainly time that we take stock or make an inventory of our shortcomings and endeavor to increase the efficiency of our law-enforcement agencies. If not, then I think it is incumbent upon those responsible for the education of young men to pay more attention to training in their early life, and I feel that this should be directed to the homes of this country, which have been and must ever be the foundation of our Republic. With good homes and proper training the foundation will stand, otherwise we may expect gradual disintegration.

It is equally important that attention should be directed to those who are responsible for our system of education in the various States. I had hoped to be able to break these statistics down by States with the idea of showing whether or not the systems of education in the various States might in any way be reflected in the number of crimes in proportion to population, but so far we have not been able to secure these data. If I succeed I may have them inserted later.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt the able address made by the gentleman from Michigan on Poland because he had only a brief time to discuss a very big problem. I do want to make a few observations in connection with Poland, however, and to quote from a report as recent as a few days ago to the effect that authoritative sources claim at least 5,000,000 Poles to have been killed in Poland since the Nazi regime in that area.

[From the New York Times of February 3, 1940]

DEATHS IN POLAND PUT AT 5,000,000—Two NEUTRAL SECRET-SERVICE MEN SAID TO HAVE OBTAINED ESTIMATE FROM GESTAPO—VICTIMS DIE ALONG ROADS—HITLER ACCUSED IN REPORT OF PURSUING SYSTEMATIC PLAN OF EXTERMINATION

LONDON, February 2.—The French Embassy in London delivered to the Foreign Office today a diplomatic document purporting to be an authentic neutral report of German atrocities in Poland. It is impossible to confirm any of the information in this document, but it is a sample of reports now being circulated in Europe.

The document is said to be the report of two neutral secret-service men who have just returned from Germany. While in Munich, they had an opportunity to discuss Polish conditions with members of the Gestapo (secret police), who are reported to have said that since the start of the war in Poland, about 5,000,000 Poles have died of starvation or exposure, were killed in battle or were shot by firing squads.

This figure is out of all proportion to all other diplomatic reports received here, but French officials went through the motions of delivering it to the Foreign Office.

Quoting the two secret-service men, the document, dated January 25, says:

"Chancellor Hitler is practicing in Poland a systematic policy of extermination toward the Polish population. The people were purposely expelled from their homes and they are dying of cold and exposure all along the roads."

The figure of 5,000,000 dead, which is about one-seventh of the entire population of former Poland, is open to question and is being questioned by Embassies here tonight.

In support of the story that Poles are being killed or dying by thousands, other neutral reports here tell of German Gestapo officials returning to Germany from Poland and telling how they are "wiping out" the Polish people. It is also recalled that Robert Ley, Labor Front leader, promised Germans living in Poland that within 50 years there would not be a Jew or a Pole in the conquered Polish territory.

It has been stated, furthermore, that the food sent to Polish homes was confiscated by the Gestapo, or the police of the Nazi regime. In reality, the conditions in Poland are far worse than the gentleman from Michigan, or anyone else here, could possibly describe to you Members of this Congress. He portrayed the conditions over there in answer to a question by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], who asked about the sending of foodstuffs to these suffering, unfortunate people.

It can be taken for granted that if any foodstuffs were to be sent to the German Red Cross, they would not be delivered or given to these poor victims in Poland who are now under the domination of Nazi Germany, but kept for home consumption. As a matter of fact, I have information, and I have documents in my possession, showing that Germany today is calling on all German people in America to send foodstuffs, clothing, and medicine to Germany, which shows the weakness of Nazi Germany insofar as food, clothing, and other incidentals of a needy people are concerned.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In a minute. Perhaps that is the reason why some of our ships have been held up by the British Government. From those ships have been confiscated thousands and thousands of packages of food being sent to Germany.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with any money that we may appropriate to feed these starving people, no matter what their nationality may be, it should be seen to that it is not distributed by the Nazi Government. The Committee on Foreign Affairs is now considering three bills for the allocation of $15,000,000 or more for the purchase of foodstuffs to save the starving people of Poland. There ought to be some amendments agreed to or some safeguards thrown about this appropriation, if made. An independent committee should be created, either by the President of the United States or by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, so that it can go in and feed the people in the Nazi area of Poland. I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I want to assure the gentleman from New York that I doubt if the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives will ever report any bill authorizing the expenditure of any sum of money that is not controlled completely by Americans, and I believe we will see to it that not only the funds but the goods, supplies, food, and clothing are disbursed by Americans in Poland.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want to compliment the gentleman from New York for his fine stand on behalf of these very deserving people. I should like to know whether he has given thought to this question: If the American people ever come to the place where they want to help and can help the poor unfortunates, how it can be done with the German Nazis around?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I believe if a proper committee, a non-sectarian, outstanding American group, is designated by the resolution which is voted out of the Foreign Affairs Committee, that committee could function. It is not a question of dollars and cents. I believe every American would do his share to help the starving people over there. This independent group, I believe, could get access and entry into Nazi Poland. Not even Hitler would dare object. I have in my file hundreds of pieces of literature shipped into America asking certain Americans to send food, clothing, and medicine to the German people in Germany.

Their own people, the Germans, are starving there today. Naturally, it follows that if we are going to send all this food and make a contribution—or call it what you like—from the Treasury, it will not be given to the poor Polish people, when even now German officials are confiscating their last pound of bread to give to their own people.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I want the gentleman to know that I believe the temper of the American people is such that if succor can be given to these poor people without involving us in a controversy our people are in favor of it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman. I made that position very clear in a statement I made on this floor a week ago.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I have just had lunch with Mr. Chauncey McCormick, who is the head of the Polish Relief Commission. He is trying to reach some agreement with the German Government so that Americans can go into that area and control the distribution of these foodstuffs and supplies. I for one am opposed to having the Congress authorize the appropriation of or appropriate one single dollar unless this can be done. Why should it not be done in Poland just as it was done in Belgium during the World War, for identically the same situation of German control exists?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am glad the gentleman has made that very clear statement. I was a Member of the Congress in 1924, right after the war, when the people of Germany were starving and we attempted to appropriate $10,000,000 for those starving people in Germany, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] recalls. I do not mind telling you further that if there are German people in that area of Poland who need food, they should be fed also. I believe the American people can do a great deal for humanity without involving themselves in any complications. We are talking about doing many things for Finland. As a matter of fact, the American people are now doing everything in their power to help Finland in the way of sending its people food and other commodities they need in the defense of their little country. I am in sympathy with Finland. We should not limit our sympathetic assistance to Finland alone, however, but extend it to the distressed and needy people of other countries.

While I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to a colloquy that appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 30, 1940, where the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] more or less indirectly criticized the Department of Labor because certain people who came here for a certain purpose were not being deported. I asked the gentleman to yield to me, and she did. I tried to clear up some questions with regard to our present immigration law. I did not advocate in my remarks the deportation of any one of these persons. I shall ask permission to extend my remarks and include therein the discussion between the gentleman and myself:

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is complaining about the admission of certain people who come here to engage in that industry?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes. If I had had more time, I could have pointed out that many of these persons really were not entitled to permits. I understand that all but a few of them are to be deported on the 1st of February.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Exactly; because they came here under a temporary permit as experts to train Americans in that particular industry.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And they were not experts and were not needed.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is a different matter.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. They did not live up to the terms of their agreement, as I have already pointed out. They asked also, I hear, for a permit to stay permanently.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They could not do that under the law if they came here for the sole purpose of teaching American girls and boys that particular trade or vocation.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If you follow my remarks closely, you will see they tried to evade the law. I may say to the gentleman—

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then they will be sent back in due course.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] then took the floor and attempted to convey to the Members that I was seeking to deport a few Czechs who came here as experts to teach our American workers how to manufacture shoes. I would like to correct this impression as I do not want the public to think it was my purpose in rising to answer the gentlewoman from Massachusetts to attempt to have these people deported. As a matter of fact, we have been bringing in people as expert labor for many, many years, going back to 1917. The Department of Labor has violated no law in allowing these persons to come to this country to teach our people new industries which are not competitive with American industry.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I shall also ask permission to quote that portion of the statement by my colleague the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN] which appears on page 798, as it would appear from that statement that I was seeking to deport a handful of Czechs:

The chairman of the Immigration Committee assures you on this floor of this House that these handful of Czechs are going to be deported because, as he claims, they have infringed some immigration laws. I want to tell the chairman of the Immigration Committee that I took this matter up with the Department of Labor and the Immigration and Naturalization officials. I think I know what these officials are up against. I have taken it up with the State Department; I have taken it up with Mr. Goodman, of the C. I. O.; I have taken it up with the delegation from Massachusetts, and it is strange that a Member from Nebraska and a Member from New York and Massachusetts must discuss a question which is not in their particular districts but in the district of the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

I have no prejudice against the Czechs. They are fine people. I carry no malice against any person who comes here and is law abiding. Not only in the shoe industry but in many other industries we ought to permit experts from Czechoslovakia to come here and train our American workers so that we may create new industries we can use in this country and employ thousands of Americans. Unfortunately, under the law, these persons who came here for a temporary stay to teach American citizens a new process in industry cannot stay here permanently. I should think the Department should grant them all the leeway possible because of the fine work they have done in training American citizens for new occupations, but there must be a deadline somewhere.

It seems to me the law probably ought to be amended or corrected so that the persons who come here and volunteer their inventions and their work, with the result that thousands of Americans find employment, may be permitted to stay here permanently and not be compelled to leave this country and go to a country that no longer exists.

I thought that was an opportune time to call my thoughts to the attention of my friend the gentleman from Nebraska, and while he had the floor I tried in vain to get him to yield to me, but he refused. I tried to put him straight, but apparently he did not think enough of me to give me an opportunity to ask him a question or two or to convey to him what was in my mind in my discussion with the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman has referred to me three times in his statement, and indicates he is going to place in the Record something I had to say on the floor of the House. The gentleman also endeavors to indicate that he did not say he was in favor of deporting someone. The gentleman and I could discuss this particular question many hours, but it has nothing to do with the bill we are discussing today. The words "then they will be sent back in due course" worried me, but I am very glad, however, that the gentleman is going to put something in the Record which would indicate that he himself is not in favor of deporting this handful of Czechs who were allowed by our Government to come here originally, 52 of whom have been deprived of the work of instruction or whatever administrative work they were doing in this shoe factory in Maryland.

I am merely interested that this handful of Czechs be given the same consideration that is being given today to 14,000 or more alien refugees who are in this country, some of whom, I believe are taking jobs away from Americans, especially since these 52 Czechs have made it possible for about a thousand Americans to have jobs.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not quite understand what alien refugees the gentleman is referring to but I believe I have made my position clear with regard to the Czechs in question.

Mr. STEFAN. I am glad the gentleman is in harmony with my ideas.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am just trying to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that he has been slightly unfair in stating in the Record that I am seeking to deport this handful of Czechs. I have not said that, and the Record will bear me out.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I wish to thank the gentleman very much for his statement, because he is making it plain that he is not in favor of deporting these men. I regret that time did not permit me to yield, but I believe we are in harmony on the subject.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want the gentleman to know that I am not the Labor Department, and I have nothing to do with deportation. We are the legislative branch of the Government, and I tried to clear up the criticism of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] of the Department of Labor because they refused to deport these Czechs. I tried to clear that up when the gentleman from Nebraska got up and said that I was in favor of deporting this handful of Czechs.

Mr. STEFAN. I am glad the gentleman is in favor of allowing these people to stay here and giving them an even chance with these other foreigners.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, on Friday last this body concluded consideration of the supply bill for the Department of Agriculture. Among other items that were presented to the House for its consideration was an item which I offered as an amendment to the total of $527,000, which was to be allocated to the Department of Agriculture for purpose of control of the pink bollworm. Of course, due to the rather hectic conditions which surrounded the debate on the House agricultural supply bill, it was rather difficult to present to this group a practical picture, and that I propose to undertake in the brief time now allotted me.

In the first place, I desire to put before you some of the facts that are a part of the known record concerning the actual destructiveness of the pink bollworm as he is found and where he is in operation today.

In China the records for 1938 showed that the pink bollworm cost China in excess of $85,000,000. Let me remind you at the outset that China and the other three or four countries which I may mention are not afflicted with the boll weevil—just the pink bollworm. In India, Egypt, and Brazil the records show that the pink bollworm takes about 60 percent of the production of cotton in those great cotton-producing countries. If the pink bollworm invades this country and gets into our Cotton Belt, the United States of America and Mexico will be the only great cotton-producing countries that have both the pink bollworm and the boll weevil.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I am pleased to yield to my friend from Georgia, who is always interested in matters that are of vital concern to agriculture, and he has been of real assistance to agriculture.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Is the pink bollworm as destructive to cotton as the boll weevil?

Mr. KLEBERG. May I state in answer to the gentleman from Georgia that the Bureau of Entomology considers the pink bollworm to be not only more destructive than the boll weevil but more destructive than all of the other known 166 pests that affect cotton combined.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Then if it ever gets to my section of the country we cannot raise any more cotton.

Mr. KLEBERG. The gentleman is eminently correct.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Where did the pink bollworm come from?

Mr. KLEBERG. The pink bollworm was introduced into Mexico in 1917 in some cottonseed brought into Mexico from Egypt and taken to what is known as the Laguna district in Mexico, from which district the Big Bend area in Texas and the States of Arizona and New Mexico have been infested.

In 1936, unfortunately, the pink bollworm came into what is known as the Matamoros cotton-producing area of Mexico, from the Laguna area, which the Matamoros area happens to be the exact gateway through which the boll weevil entered the United States nearly 40 years ago.

Now, the reason I call your attention at the outset to the destructiveness of this pest and the fact that the United States of America, if the invasion of the pink bollworm is successful, will be the only great cotton-producing country that has both the boll weevil and the pink bollworm, is to call your attention to the indisputable record of the destructiveness of this bug so you may well understand that when you add his destructive ability to the pests we now have, the United States of America will be forced to go out of the cotton business.

The cotton South will no longer produce cotton. The cotton South will be called upon to go into other avenues of production. The avenue known to those of us in the South that is best adapted to our climate and soil and what we can produce best happens to be livestock, and everybody in this Chamber, or every Member of this House, knows the condition, for instance, of the dairy industry. Put the cotton farms into the production of dairy products and the dairy industry has a real problem; but let us view the facts. When you convert the cotton-producing area into an area devoted to livestock farming, everyone who knows the facts will recognize that it is a fact that 90 percent of those employed in the area which now produces cotton will be stricken from the pay roll because the production of livestock, fortuitously, does not require the amount of individual effort and labor that the production of cotton requires. So, you have there, in addition to the economic dislocation by bringing into competition the great area devoted to cotton with the dairy industry, the added guaranty of the placing of 90 percent of those today engaged in the planting, harvesting, ginning, and transporting of cotton in the ranks of unemployed; and under the present system, where apparently our people look to the Government for relief and support, those of us who are thoughtfully inclined must recognize the disastrous impact in the offing. We had best consider seriously sound economy rather than economy which is both profligate and destructive.

Another point of practical interest to those who are willing to be thoughtful and give the best efforts of their minds to important critical situations which confront our country, is that today where the pink bollworm is confined in the United States, fortunately it is in an area where the producers of cotton are in the main well educated, where the producers of cotton are in the main well equipped with implements that are needed to conduct the control campaign. The control campaign requires, among other things, with particular reference to field work, that immediately the cotton is harvested, the plowing of the land under of all of the growing cotton, and following the plowing under, there must be a clean-up which requires a chopping out and grubbing out of every living apparent visible evidence of growing cotton in the area affected. It requires in addition to that the patrolling and cleaning up on both sides of the roadways on which the cotton is hauled in trucks to the gin, and it requires in the gin the establishment of sterilization apparatus for the purpose of sterilizing the seed, and hoppers for the destruction of all gin trash in which the pest is found. Mr. Chairman, when you permit the pink bollworm to go out of the area which is competently equipped both educationally and with matériel for the work to be done to eradicate it and permit it to go into the area referred to oftentimes as the area where the Negro and the mule do the work, where you have small farms which set on the sides of hills, which in many instances require the best agility on the part of even a mountain goat to come and go, you can readily understand that to permit the pink bollworm to get into that country where to cope with him would be tremendously more difficult and more expensive, it is short-sighted economy to permit such a thing to be even considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 minutes more.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. With pleasure to my able friend.

Mr. PACE. I believe that the supply bill which was passed by the House last Friday night carried an item of $400,000 to combat the elm-tree disease. My understanding of the elm tree is that it is a thing of beauty, an addition to the landscape, but that it has no economic or commercial value, while the Congress gave only $500,000 to combat the pink bollworm, which as I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Texas, threatens an economic loss in the cotton area of probably hundreds of millions of dollars.

Mr. KLEBERG. There is no doubt of that at all.

Mr. PACE. I have no thought of condemning the elm-tree appropriation, but it just struck me as rather singular that we freely give $400,000 to correct a situation that has no economic effect over a very small area, and only $500,000 to insure the welfare of probably fifteen millions of people.

Mr. KLEBERG. My distinguished friend from Georgia is always interested and well informed and I appreciate the question because it permits me to say that I have no desire whatever to cast any aspersions upon the appropriations of money at this time made for other purposes; but permit me to make this statement on my own responsibility as a Member of this body, that if at the conclusion of the making of all of the appropriations essential for the conduct of government, and many of those which insofar as immediacy is concerned are not essential at all, I would still insist that the increase of $800,000 requested by me for the purpose of controlling the invasion of the pink bollworm is in fact the most important money to the United States of America involved in that entire bill. Give just a brief moment of careful thought to the effects of what we know will happen when you go back to the records of the destruction of this pest and find in those records evidence replete where not only areas but countries have gone out of the cotton business entirely, where the climate and soil are perfect for the production of cotton, because of this pest alone; and you have but to consider also the fact that under the work of the Bureau of Entomology they have established a definite record of success not only in controlling this pest, but in completely eradicating the pest. Yes, and to eradicate the pest without the establishment of noncotton zones, but by thorough application of control measures such as are under way today. You will find records where in the State of Florida an area under a plow-up, clean-up campaign was completely freed of this pest in a period of less than 3 years. In the State of Georgia the same thing occurred. In the State of Texas there are three instances where counties have been cleaned entirely of the pink bollworm by the present program.

May I add in conclusion with reference to this section that the pink bollworm may, perchance, prove the best friend the United States of America has in its efforts looking toward a resumption of its proper participation in the markets of the world. It so happens that in every other country where the pink bollworm is found the difficulties involved in the lack of education on the part of the people, the lack of transportation and accessibility to the fields for inspection purposes, certain climatic conditions, make the eradication of the pink bollworm in Brazil, in Egypt, in India, and in China as national projects matters which to me seem to be impossible. In the United States of America, in North America, with the known record of achievement and ability to eradicate this pest, I say to you that it can be eradicated in Mexico, from which our present infestation comes, and it can be eradicated in the United States.

With reference to the situation in Mexico, may I state that even though it could not be eradicated in Mexico would be neither reason, nor would it be patriotic, for the Congress of the United States to neglect its fight to prevent its entry into the cotton South. This, in my candid opinion, would have a more destructive result and would be more Nation-wide in the production of both unemployment, distress, and the destruction of national and private credit than anything that could happen to us under present conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, when the President, on January 24, vetoed the measure known as the Jenkins bill, H. R. 5118, he did the State of Ohio and its old-age pensioners a grave injustice. This injustice is so grave that the people of Ohio feel that it not only is a financial set-back of well over a million dollars but, much more important yet, it is a thrust at the life and honor of the State. It invades the rights of the State in a shocking manner. It is even more than a challenge of the sovereignty of a great State. It is a defiance of the sovereignty of that State. In effect it is a case of a bigoted chief of a Federal bureau robbing a great State and then defiantly saying, "What are you going to do about it?" The great State of Ohio can lose this large sum of money and still operate, but it cannot maintain its self-respect as a great State in an indissoluble union of great States if it permits this direct invasion of its rights as a sovereign State to go unchallenged. The mad race for power by Federal bureaucracy is the greatest threat to the perpetuity of the Republic today. When we permit one little bureau chief to handle approximately $1,000,000,000 per year and distribute about $18,000,000 per month to about 1,800,000 of our aged people or to withhold it from them, we are placing too much power into the hands of that bureaucrat.

The veto power of a President comes directly from the Constitution. It is one of the most important powers given to the President by the Constitution. In effect, it gives him the power to approve or disapprove every action of Congress. It gives the Executive the power to supplant the wishes of the legislative branch of the Government with his own wishes. When a President supplants the wishes of Congress with his own wishes, that is in practical effect the tyranny of dictatorship. It was not the intention that this power was to be used by the President in every case where his wishes did not coincide with the views of Congress. The intent of the framers of the Constitution was to give to the Congress the right to control all matters of legislation. When the Congress assumes to pass upon a matter that is wholly within the purview of its powers and to pass upon it in accordance with its usual rules and procedure, the President should not disturb that action. He should not thrust his views upon the Nation as against 531 Representatives and Senators directly charged by the Constitution and the suffrages of the people to enact laws for the benefit of the Nation. But if the Congress should inadvertently pass a law without proper consideration or without the possession of all the facts, or if Congress should pass a law that invaded the prerogatives of the Executive or was clearly without the purview of the Constitution, or was so grossly unfair and unjust as to shock the conscience of reasonable men, then it would be the duty of the President to veto the same. As proof that the framers of the Constitution intended that the President should exercise great care and caution in affixing his veto, the Constitution requires the President to give his reasons in writing.

In the case in question the President did give in writing to Congress his reasons for his action. With all due respect to the President and his high office, his reasons do not rise to the dignity of reasons. I think if the President had known all the facts he would have approved the measure. His reasons for his veto are the same excuses that Mr. Altmeyer has advanced. I have no doubt that Mr. Altmeyer prepared all the material for the President's veto message. I have no doubt—and therefore I assert—that the President followed the advice of Mr. Altmeyer. In effect, in this case one little bureau chief was permitted to take advantage of a right which the framers of the Constitution gave to the President to be used so rarely as to be almost sacred. This in itself is a terrible situation. If this custom persists our liberties are in great jeopardy. The life and strength of a State is its inherent sovereignty. When bureaucracy transcends State sovereignty, then the States are mere outposts of the dictatorship.

This tendency to bureaucratic dictation by the Federal Government has a tyrannical effect on the activities of State officials. I should like to recite an actual case that happened in Ohio, which illustrates the effect that this bureaucratic dictation has had in Ohio on the activities of the old age pension department. About 2 months ago there came to my office in my home city an aged man for whom I had acted as attorney in small matters for many years. He had been drawing an old-age pension and had been cut off. His removal was due, as the department claimed, to the fact that he had sold a small piece of property that had netted him about $300. In moving from the property he sold, he contracted a severe illness from which he was irrational at times during a period of 2 or 3 weeks. During that time his money disappeared. He did not know where it went. The local old-age representative was satisfied that the money had been stolen. The State department would not restore him to the rolls until they could make an investigation to determine the facts. The man was so ill in my office that I feared he would die and I called a taxi and sent him home. He was then transferred to the public hospital where in a short time he died. In the meantime the State department had through its legal division rendered me a long two- or three-page report showing why they could not restore him to the rolls. The burden of their objection was that they were afraid that the Federal Government would again cut off the Federal payments to Ohio as they had done previously. While this attorney was making his investigation and making his report and upon the urgent insistence from myself, the State office sent down an inspector who soon saw the situation and made his report to the effect that the aged man should be restored to the rolls. The department, fearful of Federal interference, hesitated to do so but it finally took the chance and restored the aged man but he died before he got any relief. Here is a case where the silly, unreasonable, dictatorial, tyrannical action of one little bureaucrat so frightened the officials of a great State as to deny to an aged man in the last few hours of his life his legal rights. This proves that the Federal Government should leave to the State administration all these small matters and should confine itself to carrying out the intent of the law.

Let us review briefly what the President has done. I shall not go into detail with all the facts in this paragraph, but I shall later. Suffice it to say that there was a controversy between the chief executive of the great State of Ohio and the chairman of a Federal bureau. The President held with the chairman, without any consultation with that Governor or his successor and without any consultation with any one of the 24 duly elected Members of Congress from that State, and in spite of the unanimous action of the Judiciary Committees of the House and Senate, and the unanimous action of the House and Senate in accordance with their regular procedure, and in spite of the favorable recommendation of the director of the department of which Altmeyer's bureau is only a small part,

The President should not take refuge for an excuse in the fact that he is a busy man, for the regular way for him to have handled this measure would have been to have followed the recommendation of his director of the department in which the controversy arose and not of the chairman of one board. When a President ignores the action of Congress on a matter wholly within its jurisdiction, and ignores the recommendation of a director of a department in the Government appointed by him, and refuses to see Members of Congress of his own political party who repeatedly request of his secretary that they be seen, with reference to a matter in which their constituents are vitally interested, and follows the advice of a mere chairman of a board who was notoriously antagonistic and partisan in the controversy which the President is about to decide, then I make bold to assert that the President has acted unwisely and that when he assumed to use his veto power in such a case he grossly abused that power.

Now as to the facts and the law in this matter:

THE FACTS

Soon after the present administration commenced extending grants-in-aid to the States for relief purposes there arose a bitter official and personal controversy between Mr. Davey, the Governor of Ohio, and Mr. Hopkins, the Relief Director. This in spite of the fact that both affiliated with the Democratic Party. We are not concerned here with who was most at fault. Probably the best appraisal of it would be that both were at fault. This unfortunate animosity was carried into many of the State and Federal relationships.

The State of Ohio had been paying old-age pension for years before the Congress passed the social-security law, which provides in one of its titles that the Federal Government will, under certain conditions, match State contributions to aged people. The Federal law provided certain standards which the State of Ohio, through its legislature, promptly met. The State and Federal organizations cooperated nicely for some months when the fires of this animosity broke out in a new place. The charge of "politics" flew fast between them. The people of Ohio, in long-suffering silence, stood by and wondered, for they were helpless. A self-important, inexperienced, little chairman assumed to dictate to the Governor of a great State, giving no consideration to the fact that the State was great, regardless of what his opinion might have been of the Governor. The Governor claimed that so long as the legislature had passed laws to meet the Federal requirements and was matching its funds against the funds of the Federal Government that the chairman had no right to tell him how to administer that part of the program that he was responsible for and how to enforce the State laws, the enforcement of which was the province of the Governor. He was right in his contention. He probably could have been more tactful in his relationship with the chairman. The chairman, on the other hand, largely because of his inexperience in executive matters, claimed that there were irregularities in the selection of civil-service employees in Ohio. This might have been true. I maintain that under the Federal law and under the State law this is the responsibility of the State and not of the Federal Government. It is likely that the Governor could claim, with a fair chance of substantiation, that there were some irregularities somewhere in the Federal civil-service regulations, else a man with no executive ability would not have been made Chairman of the Social Security Board. In this conclusion many good people in Ohio would concur most heartily.

But the Governor would have no right to object. The point is that the Chairman of the Board has no authority to supervise the conduct of the Governor or State officials in this respect any more than the State officers can supervise the civil-service activities of the Federal Government. There were in 1938 about 111,000 aged persons in Ohio receiving old-age assistance. Under the rules in operation between the States and the Federal Government's Social Security Board the State makes the monthly payments and, when made and certified, the Federal Government comes forward with its portion. For instance, if Ohio was paying then, as it is paying now, an average of about $23 per month, it would pay to its 111,000 beneficiaries $2,553,000 per month.

The Ohio authorities would certify this amount, then the Federal Treasury would pay one-half of it, plus 5 percent of that one-half for the expense of distribution. It is needless to say that to pay this number of people every month is a great task. Also there are many other problems that arise. For instance, the mortality rate is high among people of this advanced age. Suppose 1 percent of them would die each month. That would mean that 1,100 estates would have to be closed and that many pension checks would be returned unpaid. From this it is evident that the auditors of both agencies would have at the end of each month many accounts to balance and many items to investigate and to resolve. Thus an inexperienced chairman would have plenty of opportunity to find fault while an experienced executive would leave such matters to the officers of the respective groups charged with their particular duty. The payments were made every month until October 1938. The Chairman complained and the Governor complained also. I am thoroughly familiar with the correspondence between them. Both were to blame for quarreling about small matters. None of the contentions between them amounted to a substantial contention. The Chairman should have remembered that the Governor was beholden to an electorate that would and did control his activities by defeating him at the election. The Governor should have realized that he was dealing with a man too small for his job.

The President should have realized this also and removed him. But since this was not done, the Chairman proceeded to exceed his authority and stopped the payment for October 1938. He allowed the payment for September and again after the November elections he allowed the November payment. If he was justified in paying in September and again in November, he should be able to show that there was some special difference in the situation in October. This he cannot do. It cannot be done. If he could show that the Governor had played politics by adding additional persons to the pay roll as was done in so many places on W. P. A., or if he could show that the Governor had misappropriated some of the money, he might justify his action. On the contrary there were 200 fewer persons on the rolls in October than in September and no charge had been made at any time that the Governor or anybody else misappropriated any money. There was no change in the law between September and November for the legislature had not met. The deputy auditor of State, a Democrat, listed as unfriendly to the Governor, stated at the hearing before the Judiciary Committee of the House that there was no material change of any kind in the manner and method of handling the matter in November as against September and October. The facts do not justify the President's veto. The reasonable conclusion that Ohio people quite generally have come to is that the President has permitted himself to be brought into this petty political quarrel between a Governor whom the people defeated and a little, inexperienced chairman who should be sent back to the classroom. It cost the people of Ohio $1,338,168 to watch this childish quarrel. The President may not think this is much money but we in Ohio still think it is a lot of money.

THE LAW IN THE CASE

I maintain that the Board had no authority in law to withhold permanently all of the money in question. Acting on this theory I immediately tried to induce the Board to reconsider its action. It refused to do so although all through the month following its decision, it attempted to induce the Governor to resume negotiations with them. The Board refused to consider an adjustment although it had done so in the Oklahoma case which was far more serious than the Ohio case. Mr. Altmeyer, the Chairman of the Board, was in fact the whole Board. In his imperious way he announced that his actions were immutable. I reminded him that the Medes and Persians, too, thought that their laws were immutable but they and their laws are long since forgotten, and that simple justice is the only attribute of law that is eternal. I read you the law, and you may be the judge:

SEC. 2. (a) A State plan for old-age assistance must (1) provide that it shall be in effect in all political subdivisions of the State, and, if administered by them, be mandatory upon them; (2) provide for financial participation by the State; (3) either provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to administer the plan, or provide for the establishment or designation of a single State agency to supervise the administration of the plan; (4) provide for granting to any individual, whose claim for old-age assistance is denied, an opportunity for a fair hearing before such State agency; (5) provide such methods of administration (other than those relating to selection, tenure of office, and compensation of personnel) as are found by the Board to be necessary for the efficient operation of the plan; (6) provide that the State agency will make such reports, in such form and containing such information, as the Board may from time to time require, and comply with such provisions as the Board may from time to time find necessary to assure the correctness and verification of such reports; and (7) provide that, if the State or any of its political subdivisions collects from the estate of any recipient of old-age assistance any amount with respect to old-age assistance furnished him under the plan, one-half of the net amount so collected shall be promptly paid to the United States. Any payment so made shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation for the purposes of this title.

(b) The Board shall approve any plan which fulfills the condition specified in subsection (a), except that it shall not approve any plan which imposes, as a condition of eligibility for old-age assistance under the plan—

(1) An age requirement of more than 65 years, except that the plan may impose, effective until January 1, 1940, an age requirement of as much as 70 years; or

(2) Any residence requirement which excludes any resident of the State who has resided therein 5 years during the 9 years immediately preceding the application for old-age assistance and has resided therein continuously for 1 year immediately preceding the application; or

(3) Any citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States.

SEC. 4. In the case of any State plan for old-age assistance which has been approved by the Board, if the Board, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State agency administering or supervising the administration of such plan, finds—

(1) That the plan has been so changed as to impose any age, residence, or citizenship requirement prohibited by section 2 (b), or that in the administration of the plan any such prohibited requirement is imposed, with the knowledge of such State agency, in a substantial number of cases; or

(2) That in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by section 2 (a) to be included in the plan.

The Board shall notify such State agency that further payments will not be made to the State until the Board is satisfied that such prohibited requirement is no longer so imposed, and that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until it is so satisfied it shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

You will notice that Section 2 provides the requirements which the States must fulfill. Ohio did this to the letter. It was easy to do for Ohio already had been paying old-age pensions on the average of about $15 per month for some time.

Section 4 is the section to which I wish to call your special attention. In substance the section states that if the Board finds that the plans have been changed, and so forth—which is not the case in this controversy—or that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply "substantially" that the Board shall notify the State that further payments will not be made to the State "until" the Board is satisfied that such failure no longer exists. I should have you note the word "until." This means that the Board may withhold "until" something happens and not permanently. If Congress meant permanently, it would have said so. Surely the power to confiscate this large sum of money is not lodged in this Board. This would be more power than the President or any court in the land has. This surely could not amount to what in law is known as a forfeiture. If the Board is correct in its interpretation in Ohio's case, how could it possibly be correct in the Oklahoma case? If it was right in withholding October's payment it was wrong in paying for September and November.

Even if the Board cannot change its orders, that is no reason for this veto. It was because the Board refused to pay or to change its order that I introduced the bill. I did so to relieve the situation. I was interested in making it easy for the Board to do justice.

Now the real question in the whole matter is, If the Board cannot as the law stands now make the certification, then Congress should do so by legislation. Can it be possible that one little chairman of a little board in Washington can trample justice in the dust, and lay a heavy fine on a great

State of the greatest union of States that the world ever saw? Since when have we, a free people who take great pride in our courts and juries, in our Congress and Senate, come to such a low estate that one man can be judge and jury over our rights, and can be House and Senate over our liberties? How can a President who lends himself to such childish petulance claim to be entitled to the confidence of the people to such an extent that they will give him what Washington would not ask for, and what Jefferson would not have, and what Jackson would have resented? Justice, like truth, when crushed to earth shall rise again. What one President wrongfully refuses to do another President may gladly do. One little bureaucrat cannot stop a righteous cause. The greatness of Ohio is the indomitable spirit of her people. She will win with justice and time as her allies. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENTON].

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate that has been going on concerning the charges that the great State of Pennsylvania has been and is being short-changed in her allotment of W. P. A. employment since Governor James took office. All I have to add to this phase of W. P. A. is that we should certainly get all that we are entitled to, and I trust that we shall in the future.

Today I want to speak to you regarding another phase of W. P. A. that is affecting my district in Pennsylvania. At this point may I inform the House that I represent the third largest congressional district in Pennsylvania—some 365,000 people in Schuylkill and Northumberland Counties. Our major industry is anthracite-coal mining.

We of the hard-coal region have been especially hard hit for the past 8 or 10 years and consequently have an unusually heavy relief load.

I want to protest against the reduced wage rate in the W. P. A. set-up in my district. The Administrator has established wage rates based on population of communities in various counties and has designated four categories accordingly.

As I said before, I have a district of over 365,000 people. However, we have been relegated into the third category because neither of my 2 counties has a city of 25,000 population—one city falling short by a few hundred—and have received, instead of a slight decrease in the wage rate of last year, a cut of 27 percent for this fiscal year.

As far as relative high costs of living are concerned, the anthracite region of Pennsylvania always was and still is considered a high-cost-of-living area.

It is well known that several of our neighboring counties having cities of 100,000 or more population have always been cheaper as far as living expenses go, and yet they enjoy a higher rate of W. P. A. wage than do we of the anthracite region, especially Schuylkill and Northumberland Counties.

As a matter of fact, we do have several towns and cities that lack only a few hundred people in making cities of 25,000 population. But if the population of the surrounding territory of these cities and towns was taken into consideration, we would have many communities and cities exceeding 25,000 and even 50,000. I understand that this has been done in certain parts of our State which gives them a higher wage rate.

I am firmly convinced that this policy of fixing W. P. A. wage scales on a population basis is discriminatory and a violation of the terms of section 15 (a) of the Emergency Relief Act of 1939, which states:

After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living.

On January 24 last, I introduced House Resolution 439 in the hope that an unjust situation is rectified by Congress.

My friends, the entire population of the Thirteenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania is dependent on our coal mines. Our businessmen, our schools, our churches, our professions, our farmers, our railroad men, in fact every living soul derives his existence from anthracite mining.

Many of our coal mines have been closed because of the financial failure of some of our mining operators, in many instances due to circumstances beyond their control. Most of the companies remaining in business and still operating are finding it hard to meet their obligations. Our relief problem is acute.

I am well aware of the fact that the best way to solve our unemployment problem is to put men to work—to give them jobs in industry at decent wages. But, I ask you, where will our unemployed go to get a job? You who are fortunate to have a diversified industrial section can well look forward to this means of taking up the excess unemployed.

My friends, our people are rapidly being dispossessed of their homes; those who rent homes are in arrears and ejection notices are common. Many of our people are hungry.

I have seen men on the W. P. A. working in the filth and stench of our sewage-disposal systems. I have seen them lift rocks that would tax the strength of a machine, to say nothing of a human being. I have seen them ridiculed and scorned. I have seen them do all these things just to keep body and soul together.

And, of course, we in my district know too well how they were coerced, intimidated, and hi-jacked for tickets and card parties up until the present fiscal year. We have reason to believe that "pressure" is still being used in my district, although this is denied.

I am still of the opinion, however, that an impartial investigation is still necessary in the Thirteenth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, and those who would use the relief rolls for gain should be exposed and sent into oblivion, where such parasites belong.

I want you to know that I have supported and voted for all relief appropriations asked for by our President. In the first deficiency appropriation bill I voted for $725,000,000, as recommended by your Appropriations Committee, when we were told that there was $50,000,000 to $90,000,000 left from the old appropriation that had not been used, and that another deficiency bill would be presented if needed.

And then, when the President presented his message for the $150,000,000 that he said was necessary in addition to the $725,000,000, I voted for the whole amount. When that was defeated in committee I voted for $125,000,000. Needless to say I voted for the full amount for the fiscal year as presented by our Chief Executive.

The people of the anthracite region, composed as we are of all nationalities, are a hard-working, honest people, and want to work. They are tired of being buffeted around from pillar to post. And the sad part of it is that our own Government is helping to put them in the plight that they are in at present. How? you ask.

First. Under the guise of flood control they are establishing hydroelectric power plants throughout the country, which have reduced coal production.

Second. Importations of foreign coal, while not great at this time, and described by some as only "a drop in the bucket," is nevertheless vicious, and has no place in our American system of commerce as long as any of our miners are unemployed. And what is true of coal importations is true of other cheap importations that are playing havoc with our labor and agriculture.

Third. In many of the new post offices in our neighboring counties—right in our back yard—our Government has placed and is placing heating units and apparatus to use fuel other than hard coal.

Fourth. We are importing fuel oil at the rate of 1,000,000 barrels a week. I am told that half of it is imported duty free and the other half comes in at ½ cent a gallon. Imported oil, therefore, displaces 10,000,000 tons of coal annually.

Fifth. And now the Government has decreased the earnings of the W. P. A. worker—the laborer—27 percent. Is it any wonder that a great many of our citizens in my district have resorted to "bootlegging" coal? Can you blame them? Oh, it is all right to "sit on the back seat" and give the driver advice. But place yourselves in their position.

Driven to desperation in seeing hunger in their families they try to eke out an existence in bootleg mining from which many are being killed or maimed for life. Landlords are demanding their rent, and home owners are being dispossessed of their properties. Many are being denied work on W. P. A. projects for various reasons.

The W. P. A. Administrator, although he admits he is "sympathetic" with our situation, says that $42.50 a month is sufficient for our W. P. A. workers, regardless of the size of a man's family—whether he has no dependents, or if he has seven or eight children.

Think it over, ladies and gentlemen of the House, and I respectfully ask your support of House Joint Resolution 439—a resolution proposing to amend the Emergency Relief Act of 1939 by providing a prevailing-wage rate. This, I believe, was the full intent of this Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

THE N. L. R. A. SHOULD BE AMENDED

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, any law which when enforced does not tend to accomplish the purpose for which it was enacted, should be repealed or amended. The N. L. R. A. is such a law and should be amended.

All through the last session an earnest effort was made by me to induce the House to amend the National Labor Relations Act. That effort was without success.

Again the question is before Congress and again our request that the law be amended is met by delay.

Not so long ago those who proposed amendments to the Wagner Act were charged with being enemies of organized labor. In truth and in fact we who then sought amendments to the law were and are the real friends of labor. Those who until recently took the position that the law should not be amended in any respect evidently assumed that the act as originally written was perfect. They ignored the fact that the only law which experience has shown to be adequate and in no need of amendment was that laid down on the tablets of stone and known as the Ten Commandments.

Even our Constitution, man's great masterpiece, the solid foundation upon which our Nation and our civilization has rested for 150 years, was found by experience to be in need of amendment. Did the authors of this act possess greater wisdom, produce a more perfect rule of conduct, than did our forefathers when they brought forth the Constitution?

I have been charged with being opposed to collective bargaining. There is no foundation for such a statement.

I have offered an act to repeal the Wagner law because repeal is the only method by which we can get rid of the present personnel of the N. L. R. B., which has so grievously misinterpreted and maladministered the National Labor Relations Act. I would reenact those provisions of the National Labor Relations Act which have been found beneficial and add to them other provisions which would make the law more effective, which would insure real collective bargaining and protect all subject to its operation.

Some who say no one except themselves is competent to offer amendments to the law have changed their attitude and now, since the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. both advocate amendments to the National Labor Relations Act, have taken the position that they, too, are in favor of amendment.

Their attitude calls to mind the weathervane on grandfather's barn, which shifted with every change of the wind. Apparently the breeze created by the expression of views from the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. leadership has changed the policy and the minds of some others.

It seems foolish to assume that the Wagner Act cannot be improved, to rest content with the thought that it is the last word in labor legislation; yet such has been the attitude of many of its sponsors.

Others who denounced the adding or deleting of a word, the changing of a syllable, as a sacrilege and an attempt to enslave labor have come to realize their mistake. The Manufacturers' Association, which was bitterly excoriated when it ventured to suggest that changes would improve the law, has been joined in the demand for amendment of the act by the great A. F. of L. and of late by the C. I. O., as well as by thousands of individual employees and employers, though naturally the proposed changes are not in each instance the same.

To justify its existence a law must extend equal protection to all who are affected by it. Our whole judicial system, which was devised for the purpose of administering our law, rests upon the premise that all men are equal before the law. Equality before and under the Wagner law was not in the minds of those who conceived and drafted it. Admittedly it was devised to advance the fortunes of one group—the employees. It has been used to restrict the rights of employees. Its announced purpose was to lessen the causes of industrial disputes affecting interstate commerce. To every industrial dispute there are at least two parties, employee and employer. In some industrial disputes there are two rival unions arrayed against each other, with the employer and the unorganized employees caught in the middle and without means of escape from the strife.

That the Wagner Act is not just and fair to all who are affected by its operations is shown by the following statements, the truth of which I challenge my opponents to successfully dispute.

The Wagner Act defined and gave to employees certain rights. The act neither defined nor gave to employers one right. It made many lawful acts of employers unlawful and designated those acts as unfair labor practices and placed it within the power of an administrative board to inflict upon employers penalties for the commission of those acts.

The act does not make unlawful acts done by employees, which may harm or even utterly destroy the business of the employer, unfair labor practices. Nor does it condemn or punish any act of an employee, no matter how unlawful or how destructive that act may be to the employer or how injurious to the public. And, under it, a minority group of employees may destroy the collective bargaining rights of a majority group of employees, even though they belong to a union.

Under the act the employee, the union organizer, be he Communist or convicted felon, may make misleading statements about the benefit which joining a union may bring to the employee. He may deliberately lie about the employer to induce men to join a union, while, on the other hand, the employer may not even say to the employee that he need not join a union in order to hold his job.

The right of free speech and a free press, even to the extent of making false charges about an employer's business, his methods, and his religion, may be exercised by the employee or the union organizer. The right to make truthful statements in answer thereto is at the present time by the Board denied the employer under the law as it stands today.

The act designates as an unfair labor practice, coercion and intimidation when practiced by the employer against the employee. It places no restraint upon coercion and intimidation when practiced by the employee against employer, nor when practiced by a union organizer or a union upon the employee.

An employer not interested in a jurisdictional dispute between the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L., willing to bargain with either, finds himself, if he deals with one, threatened with a strike by the other. His business may be destroyed by the conflict between the rival unions, but under the act as it stands he is without remedy.

Absolute proof that under the act the employer has no protection against the picketing, the destructive picketing, of a minority union; that a majority of his employees belonging to a rival union are not free from coercion and intimidation by a minority union is found in the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia handed down on the 27th day of February 1939.

In that case a retailer here in Washington employed 11 fur workers. Nine belonged to the A. F. of L., two to the C. I. O. The two called a strike and joined by outside pickets who, in the language of the court, "were disorderly in their conduct and attempted assault" upon the nine "intimidated and coerced them by threats of bodily harm and interfered with customers while they were entering or leaving the business establishment." The purpose of this strike as announced by the court was to compel Zirkin's to violate the Wagner Law by forcing the A. F. of L. employees to forsake their union, join and pay dues to the C. I. O.

The Court after stating that the dispute might proceed indefinitely and bring ruin to the employer said:

It was clear further that in such a situation there is no remedy for the employer under the N. L. R. A. * * * the result is an inequality before the law as between employer and employees in this particular, namely, that while the employer has a substantive right to carry on his business, he lacks a legal remedy for protecting the same against injury through the struggle of competing unions, even though he be indifferent as to the choice of his employees between them; whereas the employees, in respect of their substantive rights of self-organization and collective bargaining, are afforded a protective remedy under the election and certification powers of the Board.

In view of this pronouncement by the Court and its further statement that—

The argument of hardship "must be addressed to Congress in respect of the possibility of an amendment of the N. L. R. A."

Do my opponents still contend that the law should not be amended so as to afford protection to the man who creates the jobs and pays the wages; that the law should not be amended to give protection to those employees who resist coercion which would force them into the ranks of a rival union? Section 7 of the act expressly provides that employees shall be free to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. Other provisions of the act, however, made this impossible. Proof absolute that employees are deprived of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, yes, of the right to join the union of their choice, is found in the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia and in the decision of the United States Supreme Court handed down on January 2, 1940, affirming the decision of the circuit court in the case brought by the American Federation of Labor against National Labor Relations Board.

In that case by a manipulation of the territorial limits of the unit from which representatives for collective bargaining were to be chosen, American Federation of Labor unions on the Pacific coast were destroyed and their members deprived of the very right to bargain collectively which was presumably given them by section 7.

Of this situation the Court said:

A situation has arisen as the result of which a so-called closed-shop contract may be entered into which will require petitioner's members, even where they predominate in a particular locality or business, to join the other union or possibly be displaced from their employment by members of that union.

The Court then said:

So that what happened was precisely what in a proper case the act designed should happen, but as we have seen, with the result that petitioner, in the localities in which its members constituted a majority was—if the Board's decision as to the representative unit is valid—deprived of the very thing which petitioner insists it was the purpose of Congress to secure and protect.

As the Court further stated, this action of the Board struck at the very roots of the A. F. of L. union and, I quote, "destroyed its effectiveness in a large geographical area of the Nation," and deprived the A. F. of L. "of opportunities to secure bargaining representatives of their own choice."

It being conceded, as it must be conceded under these decisions of the highest court in the land, that the law is unfair; that it is unjust; that it deprives the employer of the protection which would prevent the destruction of his business; that it deprives employees of the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing; and that it may be used to destroy a labor organization which has had a constructive record for more than 50 years; there is now no reason why the Congress should not, without further delay, correct these faults by amendment. For that purpose almost a year ago I introduced H. R. 4990 and have consistently pressed for its adoption or the adoption of some other constructive amendments, which will prevent at least some of the miscarriages of justice which have left financial ruin and industrial strife in the wake of the enforcement of this law. [Applause.]

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include a table.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

THE NATIONAL GRANGE AND THE RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to appear before the Ways and Means Committee on Monday to make some remarks on the pending bill relating to reciprocal-trade agreements. Unfortunately I got mixed in the dates and the hearings concluded last Saturday. I propose therefore to make some of those remarks this afternoon on the floor of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I am making this appeal to the House of Representatives in behalf of and out of respect for American agriculture, and because of the continuing distress of our American farmers.

I appeal to the Congress not only as a Member of this body from an agricultural area and district but as one who for 25 years has been proud to be a member of an association, one of the oldest, most historical, and revered of American farmers' institutions, the National Grange.

It is unnecessary for me to tell the Members of the House that the National Grange is in no sense a political institution. Neither is it necessary for me to tell you of the high sense of patriotism, morality, truth, honor, integrity, and culture that has characterized the assembly of every subordinate Grange since the very inception of that honored and highly esteemed agrarian institution.

The National Grange has long spoken to the committees of the Congress through its accredited and elected representatives. In the course of the hearing just concluded before the Ways and Means Committee, as to the wisdom of continuing the so-called Trade Agreement Act, the Grange once again addressed an appealing and fundamentally sound viewpoint to the Congress.

Their representative, the Honorable Louis Taber, master of the National Grange, appeared in opposition in behalf of the institution which he is honored to represent. He addressed himself wholly to the agricultural, economic, legislative, and factual matters involved in the trade-agreement program and took occasion to point out its adverse effects upon American agriculture.

There was nothing flamboyant in his statement. There was no vestige of the personal or political in his presentation of the viewpoint of the National Grange. The committee was fully aware of this fact before he spoke a single word.

The Honorable Louis Taber is my friend! He is known and respected by every Member of Congress! For nearly 20 years he, and the Grange's Washington representative, Mr. Fred Brenckman, has been in and out of these halls laboring indefatigably to the best interests of American agriculture.

Despite Louis Taber's repute and integrity as a speaker of truth none other than a member of the President's Cabinet, Mr. Henry Wallace, when testifying before the Ways and Means Committee chose to impeach the motive that prompted the appearance of Mr. Taber before that body.

It so happens that in this particular appearance Mr. Taber addressed himself, as was his duty as the representative of the National Grange, in opposition to a national farm program advanced and supported by the President and the Secretary of State.

Mr. Chairman, since when did the Honorable Henry A. Wallace begin to pay lip service to the Hull reciprocal trade agreement program?

Let us look behind the spoken words of Mr. Wallace before that committee in order to see in truth just what he actually thinks of the real effects upon American agriculture that have been wrought since the trade-agreement program was put into effect.

In his address before the Commonwealth Club in San Francisco, made only 30 days prior to his appearance before this committee, Mr. Wallace declared:

The farmers thought they had a special stake in the program. For 100 years they sold large quantities of their surplus farm products to Europe. They had hoped that the trade-agreement program would get those markets back, but in spite of the sincere and painstaking work of the State Department the tide toward nationalism in the Old World has been so strong that it could not be reversed.

It was Mr. Henry A. Wallace, who said that the farmers thought they had a special interest and stake in the trade-agreement program.

It was Mr. Henry A. Wallace who said that the farmers had hoped that the trade-agreement program would recapture their lost foreign markets.

It was Mr. Henry Wallace who said that the farmers got fooled.

It was Secretary Wallace who gave away the foreign markets for our exportable cotton and other products.

Now, because Mr. Louis Taber comes before the Ways and Means Committee to make an appeal in behalf of the American farmers, for the recapture of both foreign and domestic markets, he is branded as a "farm lobbyist" by one of the President's official family, Secretary Hull; and another member of that family, Mr. Wallace, tells this committee that maybe Louis Taber wants to become the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, I venture to say that every Member of this House, regardless of his political faith, will endorse my statement when I say that there is no man in or out of public office more able and as well qualified to fulfill and discharge the duties of Secretary of Agriculture of the United States than is Louis Taber.

Louis Taber is no theorist. He is a God-fearing, hard-headed, dirt-root farmer. Believe me when I say that there would have been no slaughter of the little pigs; no plowing under of cotton, corn, and wheat; no shooting of cattle; no destruction of our precious farm capital. God knows if Louis Taber had been Secretary of Agriculture, and invested with the power bestowed by this Congress upon Mr. Henry A. Wallace, then American farmers would now be out of the slough of despond and on their way down the highway to a long line of years of plenty and prosperity.

On a recent trip into the Middle West I heard a story told by a farmer of Iowa who was discussing the loss of their domestic markets for butter and hog lard, now being destroyed by the importation of jungle oil and fats used to make lard and butter substitutes. There was more talk about the tremendous imports of dried and frozen eggs and the continued import of egg yolks and albumen from China when one old farmer spoke up and said:

Well, I'll be danged, Henry Wallace has certainly turned out to be the best Secretary of Agriculture that the Chinese ever had!

Mr. Wallace was against trade agreements; for what reason is he now supporting the Hull program? I am personally opposed to the continuation of the act now, and for the same reasons for which I opposed it when it was originally proposed.

I am opposed to the Trade Agreement Act now for the same reason advanced by Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, when he, as a Member of this House, opposed the flexible tariff provisions giving the President power to raise and lower tariffs, which provision was not a tithe as dictatorial and as arbitrary as the powers given Mr. Hull under the present act.

I can well remember the time—May 13, 1929—when my friend, the eminent and distinguished Secretary of State, stood on the floor of the House and denounced the bill which he now administers and advocates.

I can almost hear Mr. Hull telling his colleagues:

The proposed enlargement and broad expansion of the provisions and functions of the flexible tariff clause is astounding, is undoubtedly unconstitutional, and is violative of the functions of the American Congress.

Those were the spoken words of the Secretary of State who now comes before the Ways and Means Committee to ask its approval of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. He asks that there be reported out of that committee an act which he himself, a brilliant lawyer and eminent jurist, 10 years ago declared to be unconstitutional.

Is the Secretary of State not now, as he was then, duty bound and sworn to uphold the Constitution of these United States? Why then did he stand mute before the Ways and Means Committee on the question of the constitutionality of the Trade Agreements Act? He spoke on the question of its constitutionality when a Member of Congress. Why does he not speak of it now?

No court has been privileged to speak on that question. Why has Secretary Hull not allowed a court test to be made as to the constitutionality of the act? Is it because he realizes that he is now himself administering an unconstitutional law on an unconstitutional act, an act which is burdening every farm, livestock, and dairy producer; yes, every worker in the mines, mills, factories, and quarries of these United States?

In continuing his address in May 1929, Representative Hull went on to declare:

Not since the Commons wrenched from an English King the power and authority to control taxation has there been a transfer of the taxing power back to the head of a Government on a basis so broad and unlimited.

Mr. Chairman, the delegation of power about which Representative Hull was then complaining never contemplated the extension of dictatorial power over industry and agriculture delegated by the New Deal Congress in June 1930 to the Secretary of State under the Trade Agreements Act.

Like Secretary of State Hull, I also hold that the amendment to the tariff act now in effect is undoubtedly unconstitutional, and that it is—to quote the language of the Secretary—"violative of the functions of the American Congress."

I am entirely in accord with the views expressed by Secretary Hull, who, in discussing the provisions of the act which he now administers, declared:

This is too much power for a bad man to have or for a good man to want.

Mr. Chairman, my own tariff philosophy is more agreeable and in accord with that of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]. Our minds meet as to what constitutes sound tariff legislation. I am wholly in sympathy with the views expressed by him on the floor of the House on May 17, 1929, when he stated:

Individually I believe in the tariff based upon sound economic facts, such facts to be controlled by a nonpartisan commission, free from political or selfish influence, with an aim and purpose in view of raising a reasonable portion of the national revenue at the customhouses, and at the same time * * * as far as can be ascertained in this and foreign countries, if there is any difference in production cost, to give even the reasonable advance to the domestic producer.

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the tariff program and principle laid down by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee squares exactly with the tariff program of the National Grange, approved and adopted at its annual meeting in Peoria last December.

The Grange also believes in the establishment of a nonpartisan committee responsible to Congress, and the tariff plan of the Grange further states:

We favor the levying of excise taxes on all imports of the dutiable list when the landed cost of such goods falls below the wholesale selling prices.

There is, however, Mr. Chairman, still one more matter of the Trade Agreements Act to which I would like to address myself. That is the matter of the repeal of the right of the American farmer to protest any reduction in duty or tariff rates when made to the President under the Trade Agreements Act.

In denouncing a proposal to repose the hearing of appeals in the Secretary of the Treasury, the now Secretary of State, Mr. Hull, on May 13, 1929, declared to this body:

This is bureaucracy run mad. The very suggestion that the most valuable property rights of the citizen can be disposed of or dealt with as a finality by the Treasury Department with the slightest recourse to the courts of the country is wholly impossible to understand.

Mr. Chairman, those are also the words spoken by the Secretary of State, who now administers an act that palpably denies to every farmer the right to "a day in court," to protest any reduction in tariff on foreign agricultural products.

The American farmer, the American laborer, the representatives of their agricultural, labor, industry, trade, and commerce organizations, have for 7 years been endeavoring to bring this so-called Trade Agreements Act into the courts of the United States.

They desired to do this to test the constitutionality of an act that encouraged a flood of agricultural imports that have been drowning out our domestic markets and to abate the damage being done to them by the amendment of the Trade Agreements Act. Due, however, to a repeal provision of that act, the American producers have been deprived of any and every right to any reduction in duty made by President Roosevelt under his good-neighbor policy and the Hull trade agreement program.

Since the passage of the act some of the most distinguished lawyers in the land have been unable to find a way in which to bring that act into the courts of the United States for a hearing even as to its constitutionality.

In conclusion, let me say that out of respect to American agriculture and American labor, in deference to constitutional law and national welfare, the right of American producers to protest all injurious legislation and reductions in tariffs, as provided for in the Tariff Act of 1930, must be restored to the Federal statutes.

Regardless of what the proponents of the reciprocal trade agreements proposal might maintain, the records of the foreign commerce of the United States support the fact that since the enactment of the trade-agreement amendment and the reduction in tariff rates made on agricultural production, this country has been devastatingly flooded with a tremendously increasing volume of agricultural products which compete with our own, with substitutes therefor and derivatives thereof. [Applause.]

I hope there will be extensive debate when the renewal of the reciprocal-trade program is brought up for discussion on the floor of the House of Representatives, particularly in relation to the powers of the House of Representatives. We often suffer, in fact generally suffer, by comparison with the Senate of the United States. At all times you will find the Senate upholding and protecting its powers, its rights, and its functions. You can find in almost every newspaper articles about the power of the Senate to ratify treaties, that these trade agreements are nothing more than treaties, and, therefore, the Senate will see to it that its rights to ratify treaties are protected; but you see almost nothing, you hear almost nothing, about the powers of the House of Representatives and our constitutional rights and our control over the writing of tariff legislation and the raising of revenue.

It is far more important for this House to uphold its constitutional rights to raise revenue than it is for the Senate to argue whether these agreements are treaties or not. If we have any legislative power in the House of Representatives, it is the control of the purse strings, it is the power to raise revenue and to tax. When you surrender or delegate away that power and turn over the control of the purse strings, or the raising of revenue, you destroy the legislative functions of the House of Representatives and leave this body with no more legislative power than Ghandi has clothing.

I have digressed from my prepared remarks for one sole purpose, to insist that Members of the House, Republicans and Democrats alike, must seriously consider the constitutional angle and the powers of the House; for if we turn over the writing of tariffs and the raising of revenue to the Executive, or even to the Senate, we shall have destroyed our greatest constitutional power, we shall have let it slip through our fingers through our own improper acts.

Ours alone is the responsibility for the encroachment by either the Executive or the Senate upon the legislative functions of the House of Representatives. Either we are a legislative body, and the greatest legislative body in the world, or we have ceased to exist as a legislative body and have permitted encroachments from both the Senate and the White House. We have by our own volition surrendered the control of raising revenue and writing tariffs, powers delegated to us and written into the Constitution, and actually one of the most important functions of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. SANDAGER. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman's train of thought but, in his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee, Secretary Wallace attributed the present European war to the Smoot-Hawley tariff. The gentleman from New York is a close student of foreign affairs. I would like to have his opinion on this subject.

Mr. FISH. I am a little embarrassed. I have but 20 minutes. I have some other things to say also. I am afraid that were I to launch into the subject raised by the gentleman now I would take more than 20 minutes.

My main purpose of my wanting to appear before the Ways and Means Committee was to expose the utter fallacy, the consistent and persistent propaganda that these trade agreements are synonymous with peace. I propose, if I get the time, to attack that theory in this House, to show that these trade treaties have no more to do with peace than cheese has to do with chalk. The greatest of the trade treaties before the British treaty was that with Czechoslovakia. Did that save Czechoslovakia from being gobbled up? The next greatest trade treaty was with Great Britain, with the unconditional, most-favored-nation clause that brings free American labor paid $3 a day and upward into direct competition with the labor of the rest of the world, with the 20-cent labor of Japan, with the $1 labor of central Europe. Did that save Great Britain from going to war when her interests were at stake? Not only have these trade treaties nothing to do with peace in spite of the propaganda that is sent out daily from the State Department to numerous women's organizations in America, but you can also make the argument that these trade treaties with the unconditional, most-favored-nation clause, giving the same advantages, the same benefits, to all the other nations that give nothing in return for dumping their cheap products into American markets in competition with free American labor is the cause of a great deal of our unemployment. The American Federation of Labor has repeatedly gone on record against the importation of cheap goods from Japan. Due to this importation, ill will, enmity, and even hostility has arisen in the ranks of the American Federation of Labor against Japan.

So I could argue at length that these trade treaties, instead of bringing about peace, are the cause of not only dissatisfaction and unemployment but they create ill will in this country against foreign nations from which these low-price, cheap goods come.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MURRAY. The gentleman is from a dairy section?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY. Has the gentleman heard of anybody who appeared before the committee, or does he know of anyone who would get up here on the floor and show where they have been of any benefit to the dairymen of this country?

Mr. FISH. My district is brought into direct competition with the dairy interests of Canada and the milk and cream from Canada come into direct competition with my dairy farmers. Naturally the cost of production is less in Canada than in the United States. Also, due to certain laws of New York State having to do with the control of health and hygiene, our dairy operations are more expensive. Our dairymen are being discriminated against, and they realize it, by the Canadian trade agreement. They are opposed to these trade treaties as being harmful to their livelihood. That applies not only to the dairymen but also to the vegetable and fruit growers of my congressional district.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not want the gentleman to feel badly, but I made that same speech to the Ways and Means Committee for 20 minutes. I brought to the members of that committee the facts. How is it possible that the American mind can stand for a man like the Secretary of State and important Democrats and their party taking such a complete somersault of opinion from what they had in 1929? How does the gentleman explain that the public mind can endure that sort of somersault?

Mr. FISH. I will explain the whole trade-treaty situation in this way: I believe the trade treaties have been sold to the American people, or they were originally sold to the American people, on the basis of peace, and that was particularly true so far as the women of the country were concerned.

Mr. GIFFORD. I said that.

Mr. FISH. They were sold by a repetition of the word "peace." It was repeated like a parrot, and by mere weight of repetition it was effective. I think the Republicans are somewhat to blame that we did not expose this myth and explode and denounce it from the very beginning. The Secretary of State would speak almost weekly. Then the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Sayre, and also the President, would join in the chorus of "peace." All of them repeated the trade treaties are the road to peace. For a time the American people were for them; but when they saw what happened to Czechoslovakia, Great Britain, and other nations, they began to lose faith. The time has come when we should answer and explode the peace slogan and show these agreements have nothing whatever to do with peace and may be the cause of dragging us into war.

Mr. GIFFORD. I said exactly that to the Committee on Ways and Means. Why do we let them turn these complete somersaults and not expose them? It is not enough that they tell the women that.

Mr. FISH. I will answer the gentleman's question. A year ago a distinguished Republican, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], a man who has served a great many years on the Ways and Means Committee, and a very distinguished Member of this House, took the floor and spoke for an hour against these trade agreements. He took up these various arguments, the constitutional argument, the peace argument, and so on, and when he sat down I got up and said that I would hazard the guess there would not be 10 lines in the newspapers in reference to what the gentleman had to say against these trade treaties. I talked a little on the peace angle, and I stated I did not believe there would be five lines in the newspapers on what I had to say. I was right both times. But every time the Secretary of State talks, every time the President talks, or anybody for the State Department, their whole speech is in all the newspapers of the country. There is column after column devoted to it. That is the difficulty in reaching the people with these arguments, no matter how sound our arguments may be. They are not heard by the public generally.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the New York Times of today has an article on the front page which states "Liberties Union Bars from Office Reds and Fascists." I have not time to read the whole article, but it means that the American Civil Liberties Union that has been referred to so often in the House of Representatives has by its own accord and by a vote of its own members decided to bar all Communists, all Fascists, and I assume all Nazis from its committees and from acting as officials in that organization. I have never opposed the principles of the American Civil Liberties Union.

It stands for free speech, free press, free assembly, and for the guarantees of the Constitution. Those of us who opposed the American Civil Liberties Union in the past have always opposed it because the executive committee was loaded down with out-and-out Communists. Now that it has rid itself of these Communists, if the American Civil Liberties Union upholds its program of freedom of speech and the press and the guarantees of the Constitution, as far as I am concerned I am ready to go along with them. I hope these other organizations with Communist officials will do likewise. I hope the American Youth Congress, that is meeting here at this time, will likewise purge itself of the Communists within its own ranks. If it does that, then we Members of Congress and others will have nothing whatever against their organization but as long as Communists hold important offices in that or any other organization it should rightly be suspected by the public.

I hold in my hand an article entitled "The Dies Committee Is a Menace," written by Dr. Harry F. Ward, in which he refers to the remarks of the President of the United States when the chairman of the Dies committee said there were some 500 Federal employees who were either members of or friendly toward the League for Peace and Democracy. You will remember that the President said at that time that by exposing their names Mr. Dies had indulged in a sordid procedure. Mr. Ward goes on to say that it was not a Communist organization. Last Thursday the League for Peace and Democracy was disbanded and its committee memberships made public. The committees were loaded down with well-known Communists.

For example, on the reorganization committee there were Charles Krumbein, Joseph Cadden, Joseph Lash, and Max Bedacht. Mr. Krumbein and Mr. Bedacht are well-known Communists. On the program committee there were C. A. Hathaway, editor of the Daily Worker; A. A. Heller; Joseph Pass; and Angelo Herndon, a well-known Communist. The resolutions committee was composed of Earl Browder, secretary general of the Communist Party, and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, a member of the Communist executive committee.

The nominations committee was composed of James W. Ford, who ran for Vice President on the Communist ticket, and Mr. Ben Gold, another well-known Communist; yet the president of this defunct organization, Mr. Harry F. Ward, says it has no connection whatever with the Communists, although these committees were controlled and officered very largely by Communists.

Then, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] produced the names of some five hundred Federal officeholders here in Washington who were associated with the League for Peace and Democracy, who presumably were members of that organization and, presumably, paying members, because that is the way they operated, the President denounced it as sordid procedure. All I want to say is that, in spite of Mr. Ward's denial, the League for Peace and Democracy was a Communist organization, and that the gentleman from Texas was doing his duty by exposing every single officeholder in the Federal Government who had any association whatever with that Communist-controlled organization. As far as I am concerned, I think it is a sordid procedure that any person receiving a salary from the Federal Government should contribute any part of it to the League for Peace and Democracy, and those who did ought to be exposed by the Dies committee. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman, a member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. KARL STEFAN, a little while ago made some very kind remarks about me in connection with the Oslo Interparliamentary Union Conference. Today I have received the following telegram:

Finnish Interparliamentary Group sends United States of America group greetings; heartiest thanks United States of America sympathy, help, accorded Finland while Finnish democracy remains post fighting behalf civilization, justice, against brutal aggression. United States of America aid reveals same spirit nobility tinged United States of America delegates' speeches, Union's Jubilee Conference, Oslo, August 1939, when United States of America delegates greater vigour; others exhorted; no means spared; preserve peace unions aim Finnish Nation become, despite neutrality-victim aggression, violating all rules international law; thus fighting behalf peace, expects these words, stressing solidarity all democracies, followed by high-minded deeds, give active assistance. Finnish parliament asked civilized nations its appeal December 10, 1939.

MANTERE,

President of the Finnish Interparliamentary Group.

This cablegram, coming from the head of the Finnish delegation at the Oslo conference, commends the action of the American group that tried to bring about a moratorium of 30 days in order to prevent the war, and to substitute the principles of arbitration, mediation, and peaceful settlement in Europe before the European war broke out. This cablegram comes from a smaller nation, one of the nations that has been crucified as the result of the war.

I am putting this cablegram into the RECORD to show that some of these smaller nations that have since been crucified, like Poland and Finland, were in accord with the actions of the American delegation in their attempt to stave off the war by a 30-day moratorium through the concerted action of democratic nations, thus putting it up to the dictatorial nations either to turn it down or to accept it; and if they turned it down they would have had the moral obloquy of the entire world cast upon them. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise to announce that today William Dudley Pelley appeared before the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities and denied completely that he had any knowledge of or any part in writing the letters which our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], inserted in the RECORD during the past week. He further denied having ever met the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], or having any communication with him or any other member of the committee.

This, therefore, is a complete refutation of all the charges levied against the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and members of the committee in the letters which were inserted in the RECORD. They are conclusively shown to be forgeries, without any foundation in fact.

I wish also to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that the other evening I did not mention the name of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY], one of our colleagues and a member of our special committee, and I did not mention his name because I had no idea anyone would charge or imply that he was associated with anyone in an effort to discredit the committee. I make this statement in his behalf today, that he was the last person to come to the dinner party and the first to leave, and that he did not see the documents at that time and did not participate in any program or concert of action on the part of anyone to discredit the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] or any other member of the committee. I thought I should say this in fairness to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CASEY], whose name was not mentioned for the reason I have stated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, may the Clerk now begin the reading of the bill?

The Clerk read down to and including page 1, line 6, of the bill.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN] having resumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made in Committee and to include therein excerpts from statutes and certain treaties and certain outside addresses. They will be short excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief editorial by Raymond Clapper on the National Youth Administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

SIDNEY, OHIO

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call attention of the House to singular achievement of a city in my district. While many cities threw up their hands in desperation, this city, through its progressive citizenship, through its progressive people, has made an enviable record worthy of the spotlight of attention drawn by Mr. Raymond Clapper on Thursday, January 18:

I have encountered just one perfect case of recovery. The little city of Sidney, Ohio, with 10,000 population, has 97 percent of its employables at work. Every plant is operating full time, some on three shifts, making bakery machinery, machine tools, aluminum and cast-iron products, grain-elevator equipment, road-building machinery, electrical refrigerating units, plating work, folding machines and bus bodies.

The town has 22 cases of direct relief—unemployables. Total unemployed in the county, including W. P. A., are 700. Anyone who has had any machine-shop experience can get a job.

Such good fortune as Sidney's is not in store for the majority of communities. Unemployment is not going to disappear automatically.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—PERMISSION TO EXPUNGE REMARKS

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, now that Pelley, the alleged writer of the so-called Pelley letters, and David Mayne, the alleged receiver of the letters, have stated that they are forgeries, and that convinces me now that they are forgeries, having innocently placed those forged instruments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, not knowing them to be forged, I deeply regret that believing them to be genuine, and not knowing them to be forged, that I ever placed them in my remarks, and beg the indulgence of this body that I be allowed to withdraw them from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I therefore, Mr. Speaker, ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to withdraw and expunge my speech of January 22 from the RECORD. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOOK. I would rather not have the gentleman do that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I have already permitted one gentleman from the majority side to tell me what to do—

Mr. HOOK. Just a minute; I have not yielded.

I would like to see this thing straightened out, and I would not want to protract this into an unnecessarily long controversy. I have asked that they be taken out, and I have said that I deeply regret it, and therefore I would like to have the unanimous-consent request presented, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOFFMAN and Mr. KEEFE rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, at no time since this matter came up have I said one single word in criticism of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], and I am not saying any such word now. All I am asking is whether or not it is conceded that the insertion of the remarks were a violation of the rules of the House.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. COX. Just wait a minute.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offered a resolution here on the theory that the matter inserted was a violation of the rules on which a question of the privilege of the House might be raised. That is the point I want determined, and the only point.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to applaud my friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] for the attitude that he has taken with respect to this whole matter and for the restraint that he has evidenced. He has not sought to aggravate the situation—

Mr. HOFFMAN. And I am not now seeking to do so.

Mr. COX. By making any attack upon his colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], or upon anyone else. I think it might be conceded that use of the material did, in some respects, violate the rules of the House. Certainly, we are all obliged to take the statement of the gentleman as an evidence of regret.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is not the point I am making.

Mr. COX. And I am sure that he is perfectly willing to make the further statement that he offers his deepest apologies to the House.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was not suggesting an apology. All I am seeking is a rule for my future guidance and for the future guidance of the Members of the House as to how far it is permissible to go.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Am I to understand from the statement which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook] just made that this is to be interpreted as an apology to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] and to the Dies committee as well as to this House, in view of the facts that have developed?

Mr. COX. Certainly it should be interpreted as a complete retraction on the part of the gentleman, the author of the speech in question, and I am sure that the gentleman has no objection to going further and saying that he does deeply regret having used this faked material.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering, and I address my remarks to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hook], as to whether that is his attitude, because that fundamentally was provoked by my original statement, and I say this, Mr. Speaker, that I sincerely appreciate the attitude of the gentleman from Michigan, which he has manifested here this afternoon and I trust and hope that he can state that his remarks are to be interpreted as meaning that the apology is to the Dies committee and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Dies] as well as to the House.

Mr. HOOK. After all, this controversy brought up by me forced Mr. Pelley before the Dies committee.

Mr. KEEFE. I asked the question, and I trust I may receive an answer.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Michigan will accept that it is to be construed as an apology to all concerned.

Mr. KEEFE. May I ask the gentleman from Georgia whether he is speaking with authority for the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. COX. I am wondering if the gentleman from Michigan will not accept those words as his own, if he does apologize to all concerned.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, if the House feels that the integrity of the House has been impugned or if any other person has been aggrieved, if I thought for one minute that I had aggrieved anybody, I would not be so small as not to extend my apology to any person who feels himself so aggrieved.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances, I shall not object to the expunging of the remarks from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to expunging the address of the gentleman from Michigan from the RECORD? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

PORTRAIT OF HON. JOHN N. GARNER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 374

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed, on behalf of the House of Representatives and under the supervision of the Speaker, to exchange the portrait of the Honorable JOHN N. GARNER now in the Speaker's Lobby for a portrait of the Honorable JOHN N. GARNER painted by Seymour Stone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by Mr. C. M. Chester before the United States Potters Association in Washington on January 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONKIEWICZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered on October 8, 1939, by Mr. Bernard Kraftt, Buffalo, N. Y., present grand master of the Vasa Order of America, at the dedication of a monument erected over Nils Pearson, the first grand master of the order, in Fairview Cemetery, New Britain, Conn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD made today, and to place therein some extracts from the hearings and reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, further I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], who has been called to the Department of Labor and who spoke on the floor today, be permitted to include in his remarks certain excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 798, and also brief extracts from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order heretofore made, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

W. P. A. FUNDS IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Speaker, for the past several weeks there have been published in the newspapers of Pennsylvania, statements purporting to have been made by Gov. Arthur H. James, amounting to a vague general charge of unfair treatment on the part of the Works Progress Administration with respect to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Included among these newspaper items were reports that two young Members of this House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT] representing the Thirtieth District of Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] representing the Thirty-first District of Pennsylvania, had visited the Governor's office and conferred with him regarding the unfair treatment that Pennsylvania was receiving from the W. P. A.

I am very fond of both of my young friends, and I regret that they have permitted themselves to be used by some mysterious person or persons in this manner. I say "mysterious person or persons," because there is a rather unusual situation existing in Pennsylvania at this time, with respect to the executive branch of our State government. Our constitution provides that we shall have a Governor who shall be the chief executive officer of the State, but, strangely enough, after the election of Arthur H. James as Governor, another gentleman, who is and has been a citizen of the sovereign State of Texas, Col. Carl Estes, took up residence close to the executive mansion in the capital city of our Commonwealth, and while there is no provision in the constitution for an extra or assistant governor, the general opinion existing in the minds of the people of the Commonwealth is that Colonel Estes is the ghost Governor. He is the constant companion of Governor James, and friendly newspapers mildly report him as an adviser.

Now, of course, it cannot be denied that Governor James, all during his pre-election campaign, charged that the W. P. A. was a wasteful extravagant agency of the Government, and that no decent man or woman wanted to be employed on the W. P. A. Colonel Estes, to my knowledge, has never made any public pronouncement regarding his views on this matter, but, because of his close relationship with the Governor all during the pre-election campaign, it is reasonable to assume that any repression of Governor James' opinion is a mere reflection of the Estes mind; and if any doubt exists as to Governor James' views, let me quote:

[From the Scranton Times of February 21, 1939]

"TIGHTEN YOUR BELTS," JAMES TELLS MEN LOOKING FOR WORK—GOVERNOR TELLS BUILDING-TRADES MEN THAT HE BELIEVES UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEMS WILL NOT BE SOLVED "UNLESS THERE IS A WAR"

Robert Miller, vice president of the Scranton Building Trades Council; Eugene Miller, of the painters' local union; and Henry Serafini, of the building-laborers' union, who attended the conference yesterday in Harrisburg of State building-trade leaders with Gov. Arthur H. James, when a State building program was proposed by the labor representatives, in a statement this morning said the Governor told the delegation that he would not approve any program of building operations which would entail any cost to the State; that the thousands of skilled and unskilled labor deprived of the opportunity for work by canceling the program will not be given relief and that his only solution to the unemployment problem is for idle workers to tighten up their belts.

"When James J. McDevitt, president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, asked the Governor what other suggestion he might have for the unemployed men if the tightening of belts didn't work, he said, 'then you will have to shoulder guns. It has been my belief right along that our unemployment problems are not to be solved unless there is a war,'" it was stated by three local labor leaders.

It is bewildering to anyone who read in the Pennsylvania newspapers the repeated attacks upon W. P. A. made by Candidate James during the fall campaign of 1938. To anyone who read the oft-repeated campaign promise of Candidate James "to give a job to every man in Pennsylvania, not a job on W. P. A., but in Pennsylvania's private industries," which were to reach a new all-time high of prosperity under the James administration, now to hear this sudden plaintive protest by Governor James that the Keystone State is not getting sufficient aid from W. P. A. or a fair share of work relief. The independent breaker boy is breaking into tears. The self-sufficient Republican, whose campaign was sponsored by certain big-business men, has apparently found private industry unwilling or unable even in Pennsylvania's new era of Republican prosperity, to redeem that campaign promise of a job for every man. Big business financed his campaign and he now wants the Federal Government, through the W. P. A., to finance his administration.

Now this very sudden and sympathetic understanding of W. P. A. and its usefulness—which must be taken for granted because of the about face on the part of the Governor, would indicate either of two things: Either that Candidate James, when he was campaigning, knew absolutely nothing about the genuine help the W. P. A. has given to the States and local communities, or he was just making campaign speeches. If this is true, I think that Governor James should honestly state that no matter what his views were on W. P. A. prior to election, that he now finds it to be a most useful and helpful aid to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The Republican Governor of our great Commonwealth, however, in bewailing the limited aid thus far given by the W. P. A. to Pennsylvania, as compared to other States, has overlooked an essential requirement exacted of those other States, namely, that which is a prerequisite of every project—the sponsors' contribution as provided for by the Congress, as well as cooperation in designated particular localities where employables are available for contemplated projects.

May I also be permitted to point out to my two young friends that another reason that the taxpayers of Pennsylvania have to provide direct relief to varying thousands may be found in Governor James' failure to keep that pre-election pledge he made to provide a job for every man in Pennsylvania. The Republican formula for prosperity apparently is "still around the corner."

The precise picture in direct reply to Governor James' vague general charge is as follows, and this is not the imagining of a bewailing, bewildered Governor, but the facts taken right from the record, and here they are:

There are precisely 350 projects for Pennsylvania in the W. P. A. These 350 projects involve 153,700 man-months, or a 6-month schedule of 25,600 men per month. Thirty-eight of these are highway projects, involving 8,340 man-months, and for which there are no sponsors' contribution accompanying the application for the projects. Two hundred and fifty-six of these are projects involving 97,400 man-months, and for which there is no labor available. Fifty-four are highway projects, involving 17,700 man-months, for which no labor is available. If labor were available, it would give W. P. A. 18,000 additional men per month for Pennsylvania. Now, from an examination of the record, it can be readily ascertained that in the preparation of applications for projects, one is required to use intelligence and localize these applications for projects where the unemployment load is heavy.

Now my good young friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT], asked the question last Wednesday afternoon in the House, "Now, if the lack of projects is not the reason, if the lack of men is not the reason, and if the Philadelphia situation can be discounted, what is the reason why Pennsylvania, day after day, week after week, and month after month, has to provide direct relief for varying thousands who, according to the W. P. A. Administrator's own quota, should be given W. P. A. jobs?"

In my own city of Philadelphia, which is analogous to the State of Pennsylvania, in that its government is dominated and directed by the Republican Party, the W. P. A. is authorized to employ up to 39,000 persons; and what do we find? We find failure on the part of the Republican administration of the city of Philadelphia to put up the sponsors' contribution, with the result that there are now employed on W. P. A. 20,468 persons, and of these 20,468 persons, only 4,545 are on projects sponsored by the city of Philadelphia. The balance is divided up among the Federal Government, Fairmount Park Commission, the board of education, State highway department, and the State department of public assistance; and in this connection I might advise my good, young friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. CORBETT, that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania employs exactly 97 persons on its highway project in the city of Philadelphia, the streets of which city, I must confess as a native Philadelphian, are in as dangerous a condition as are the city's finances, both resulting from 50 years of Republican misrule.

Of course, it may be possible that Governor James is using a bit of military strategy, as we might well expect him to do, when we remember that his campaign activities were inspired and directed by the colonel from Texas—"Attack first and defense may be unnecessary" is the old slogan that he is hearing these days from his guide, philosopher, and friend; and I digress here to say that whereas ordinary friends are bound unto each other with hoops of steel, these two are united by hoops of steel well oiled. Undoubtedly, Colonel Estes has surveyed Pennsylvania's sentiment, even as he did before, and he has observed that the taxpayers are increasingly irate at the unnecessary burden which they have been carrying because of the short-sightedness of Republican Governor James. They will be called upon to make up the deficit caused by the varying thousands on the direct-relief rolls. A great sum of money is being spent by Governor James in direct relief, when a small fraction of it, if it had been intelligently utilized for sponsors' contribution to projects, would have enabled those thousands of men to support their families with W. P. A. wages. Only a small portion of those wages would have been provided by Pennsylvania taxpayers, who, in turn, would have benefited materially by lasting improvements to their communities, and who would have benefited spiritually by the higher moral borne in the groups of the needy, from the opportunity afforded them by W. P. A. for a self-respecting and constructive endeavor.

No wonder indeed, that Governor James has realized that he is vulnerable as a result of his stubborn attitude toward W. P. A. His failure to cooperate with W. P. A., and his consequent wasteful expenditure of the money of Pennsylvania taxpayers will subject him to a severe attack from them. Hence his decision to attack first, hoping, but hoping in vain, that he will not be forced to retreat from his position, that he will not be on the defense.

Now, I believe that my two young friends have no desire to distort the truth and, as I stated at the outset, since I believe they are being "used," I will now give them the evidence that they have been so used. Taken from their colloquy as between themselves in the House last Wednesday afternoon, it would appear that they understood by reason of their protest Pennsylvania was allocated an additional 5,000 men for the month of February. The truth is that on November 29, Dr. Logan and Mr. Russell came to the office of Colonel Harrington of W. P. A. here in Washington, at which time Colonel Matthews was present, and Mr. Russell asked Colonel Harrington to give him a forecast of employment for the State of Pennsylvania for the early months of 1940. Colonel Harrington told him at that time that he would prepare the figures for the months of January, February, and March and let him have them at the earliest possible date. And then, on December 19, 1939, Colonel Harrington authorized the following figures for the following months:

January.....	160,000
February.....	162,000
March.....	165,000

And then shortly thereafter, Colonel Matthews recommended to Colonel Harrington that it be increased an additional 3,000 for February and Colonel Harrington accepted this recommendation.

Now, shortly will come before the House the new appropriation bill for the W. P. A., and I trust that after this experience, my good Republican friends will join with us Democrats from Pennsylvania in providing an adequate sum to take care of all of the needy people of our State.

While we are handicapped in the city of Philadelphia, and cannot get our municipal government to take full advantage of W. P. A., I, nevertheless, will go right down the line and vote for the largest appropriation it is possible to get for W. P. A. as a whole. [Applause.]

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGRANERY. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that Republican members of the City Council in Philadelphia and other officials of the city government have publicly stated that it would be foolish for them to utilize W. P. A. for employment purposes because thereby they might make votes for the Democratic Party?

Mr. McGRANERY. That has been stated repeatedly.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. They have stated it publicly, have they not?

Mr. McGRANERY. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] has expired.

Under special order heretofore granted the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, although my order calls for 20 minutes, I will use but 2½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, for several months a bitter controversy has raged between the Governor of Pennsylvania, the State Administrator of the Work Projects Administration in Pennsylvania, and Colonel Harrington, the National Administrator of W. P. A.

Some days ago several Members of the Pennsylvania delegation brought the controversy to the attention of the House, and various data was inserted in the Record with the promise that more was to follow. It was my purpose to add today to those figures that my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT] inserted last Tuesday.

The figures were challenged at that time by two other members of the Pennsylvania delegation. We believe we are right, and they believe they are right. It is obvious, however, that somebody is wrong, but the greatest wrong is the fact that thousands of Pennsylvanians are in dire circumstances and our whole purpose, and beyond any question of a doubt the whole purpose of the gentleman who challenged our figures, is the securing of food and clothing for our distressed citizens.

The figures in this matter and the data are voluminous. It is impossible to come to any accurate conclusion in the sharp heat of debate here in the House, and while we talk Pennsylvania's suffering continues.

It is my custom to spend every week end in my district listening to any person who comes in to see me. For 13 months my people have flocked in from all parts of the district every Saturday, and the gravity and the seriousness of the situation in Pennsylvania was more deeply impressed upon me in the last 3 days.

I suggest, therefore, that in order to arrive at some sound and logical and true conclusion of this controversy that all Members of the Pennsylvania delegation, both Republicans and Democrats in the House, and the two Senators from Pennsylvania, meet in a joint conference with an expert representative from Colonel Harrington's office, one from Colonel Mathew's office in Pennsylvania, and one from the Pennsylvania Governor's office, where all the figures may be examined in a calm and deliberate manner, and where facts from both sides can be presented in a businesslike atmosphere that will hasten the settlement of this issue.

Tomorrow I shall so address an invitation to all of those suggested, and for the sake of the people of Pennsylvania, and in justice to them, I pray that the invitations will be accepted. Whoever is wrong we shall discover, and if we do that our representation of our State will have been proper.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDOWELL. I regret that I cannot yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY] has a special order. If the gentleman is willing to yield.

Mr. FLANNERY. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to direct a question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania in my own time, as he would not permit me to address it to him in his time. That is, if the gentleman has familiarized himself with the votes of the his Republican colleagues from Pennsylvania when W. P. A. appropriation bills were being considered in this House? I think if he is, he will have to conclude that they have not exhibited the concern that we have on the Democratic side of the House for the unemployed of Pennsylvania, because their votes show that they have repeatedly attempted to cut appropriations below the amount recommended by the President and the Administrator. I would suggest, too, that the gentleman review his own record in this respect.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Speaker, I have reserved 20 minutes. Under the situation as it develops I shall utilize but little of that time.

As one who has supported the W. P. A. program from its inception, and one who has been particularly active in behalf of the State of Pennsylvania getting its full, fair share, a share commensurate with its needs, it is deeply gratifying to me that Members from the other side of the House have become actively interested in our problems.

I believe the suggestion for a conference to be a constructive one. I am prepared to accept the invitation gladly and sincerely, and to accept the proffered help to us who have labored for this same objective over a period of years. I would, however, like to offer one amendment to that invitation; and that is, since this controversy originated in Harrisburg and since the charges made first saw the light of day there, I believe the Governor of Pennsylvania should participate in that conference and in those deliberations in behalf of the people who are his people as they are ours and a responsibility which is as much his as it is the responsibility of any Member of this House.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLANNERY. I yield.

Mr. McDOWELL. I will personally invite the Governor to attend the conference.

Mr. FLANNERY. I thank the gentleman and say frankly that I believe that is a proper approach to the questions involved. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. POLK, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein an editorial from the Terre Haute Star.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 5634. An act granting 6 months' pay to Sidney M. Bowen;

COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS

Beginning Tuesday, February 27, 1940, the Committee on the Census will hold hearings on the reapportionment of Representatives in Congress.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1360. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting the draft of proposed legislation permitting Capt. William Bowie to accept a decoration; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

1361. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill for the relief of Charles E. Molster and other former employees; to the Committee on Claims.

1362. A letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill for the relief of Dorothy Crossing; to the Committee on Claims.

1363. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting records of judgments rendered against the Government by United States district courts, as submitted by the Attorney General, amounting to $12,784.80 (H. Doc. No. 613); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1364. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, submitted by the Attorney General, amounting to $111,413 (H. Doc. No. 614); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1365. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting estimates of appropriations submitted by the War Department to pay claims for damages due to military operations, amounting to $3,974.32 (H. Doc. No. 615); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1366. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a record of judgment rendered against the Government by the United States district court in a special case, as submitted by the Attorney General, and which requires an appropriation for its payments amounting to $23,400 (H. Doc. No. 616); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1367. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting records of judgments rendered by the United States district courts against the Government, as submitted by the Attorney General, and which require an appropriation for their payment amounting to $5,370.65 (H. Doc. No. 617); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

1368. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a record of a decree rendered against the Government by the United States district court, as submitted by the Attorney General, and which requires an appropriation for its payment amounting to $250 (H. SENATE

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1940

The Senate met at 1 o'clock p. m.

Rev. Albert Joseph McCartney, D. D., pastor of the Covenant First Presbyterian Church, of Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Two men went up into the temple to pray, the one a Pharisee and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are—extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican. I fast twice in the week. I give tithes of all that I possess."

And the publican, standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, "God be merciful unto me, a sinner."

On this Ash Wednesday let us look to Him in prayer.

Father of all mercies, grant unto us, Thy servants here assembled, the spirit of this publican, who realized that the surest and shortest pathway to Thy presence was the way of humility and repentance. We stand here to discharge this accustomed formality, but on such a day as this, when believers throughout the world turn thoughts of penitence to Thee, may there be deep and sincere searchings of each one of our hearts, that through Thy redeeming mercies our sins may be forgiven. For who amongst us has not erred against Thy holy laws?

Open Thou our eyes that we may see clearly the evil that is in this troubled world through sin, and awaken all our citizens to godly sorrow for whatever share we may have had in bringing the peoples of the earth to this troubled state, either through the things we may have done or the things we may have left undone.

Deliver this people from the secret power and open shame of national sins; from all dishonesty and political corruption; from all self-glorification and shameless extravagance; from thoughtless speeches and irresponsible opinions, that stir up wrath and envy and hatred either at home or abroad. Turn us again, O God, that we may be saved. Deliver us and our children and save us in this land which Thou hast blessed with the light and liberty of pure religion. Through Jesus Christ, our only King and Saviour. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, February 6, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	Lodge	Schwellenbach

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent attending the funeral of the late Representative Dowell, of Iowa.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

DEATH OF FORMER SENATOR DENEEN

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of announcing the death of the Honorable Charles S. Deneen, former Governor of Illinois and United States Senator from Illinois from 1925 to 1931.

Had Senator Deneen lived until May 4 he would have reached the age of 77 years. And it is significant to note that until 2 weeks ago, when he was stricken with a cold, he was actively engaged in his chosen profession of the law, as well as participating in the preprimary discussions of the Republican Party in our State.

Charles S. Deneen was endowed with a personality in the widest sense of the word. He enjoyed good health. He was physically strong. He possessed an even temperament. He was an intelligent and educated man. With all these fine mental and physical attributes he was destined to be a success in life.

He will best be remembered by the citizens of Illinois because of his high and noble character. Friend and foe respected him. The fact that he has been the real leader of the Republican Party in Illinois for a period of 50 years is ample testimony of the strength of that character and the high esteem in which he was held by his fellow men.

He had a great mind and a great heart, and his passing is a loss to us all.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

AMENDMENT OF FOREIGN SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the accompanying draft of proposed legislation to amend section 26 (e) of the act of February 23, 1931, as amended by the act of April 24, 1939, the purpose of which is to insert additional language which has been found, in administering the aforesaid section 26 (e) as now established, to be necessary in order to carry out fully the purposes of this law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 7, 1940.

[Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State. 2. Draft of proposed bill.]

REPORT ON THE STABILIZATION FUND

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the stabilization fund for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1939, including a summary of operations of the fund from its establishment to June 30, 1939, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

RETIREMENT, ETC., OF OFFICERS OF THE COAST GUARD

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the Coast Guard," approved January 12, 1938, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Negro Labor Assembly of New York City, N. Y., favoring the enactment of pending antilynching legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I present a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, memorializing the President and the Congress to provide a method by which the counties in the State of Mississippi may be reimbursed by the Federal Government for losses of revenue due to Government-owned lands having been withdrawn from tax liability. I ask that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD under the rule and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

House concurrent resolution memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to provide a way by which the counties of this State may be reimbursed by the Federal Government for losses of revenue because of Government-owned lands having been withdrawn from tax liability

Whereas during the past few years the United States Government has acquired title to many thousands of acres of land in Mississippi, and now holds the title and possession thereof exempt from all State and county taxation; and

Whereas the removal of these lands from tax liability has worked a hardship on several counties of this State and some equitable arrangement should be perfected whereby the Federal Government would be authorized and empowered to reimburse the several counties according to their several losses by reason thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Mississippi (the senate concurring therein). That we do hereby petition the President and the Congress of the United States to provide a way and method whereby the counties of this State may be reimbursed by the Federal Government to the extent of their losses occasioned by the withdrawal from tax liability of all lands therein now held and owned by the United States Government, exclusive of public buildings and the land on which the same are situated; be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house of representatives be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States and to each of our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Adopted by the house of representatives January 31, 1940.

(Signed) SAMUEL E. LUMPKIN,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Adopted by the senate February 2, 1940.

(Signed) DENNIS MURPHREE,

President of the Senate.

REGULATION OF THE PETROLEUM INDUSTRY

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point resolutions adopted by the Kansas State Chamber of Commerce, the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Wichita, Kans., and also a copy of the resolutions adopted by the Wichita Chapter of the American Petroleum Institute, all voicing opposition to the enactment of H. R. 7372, and opposing any similar proposals to place the petroleum industry under Federal regulation.

In this connection, Mr. President, I desire to state my own opposition, on behalf of the people of the State of Kansas, to this type of legislation. There are certain matters which, in my judgment, fall into the sphere of Federal regulation, but the regulation of a private industry, such as the production of petroleum, does not, I think, fall into that category.

The conservation of petroleum supplies is, I believe, a matter of public interest; but such conservation programs should be handled by the States themselves until such time as they have plainly demonstrated that they are not equal to the task. There is no need for going beyond State regulation at this time, and I hope the time when we will have to call upon the Federal Government to take over the duties and responsibilities of the States in this field shall never come.

In the past few years the oil-producing States, including Kansas, have proved their capacity and their ability to handle this conservation problem. So long as this condition obtains, I regard any proposal to take from the States the power to regulate and turn it over to the Federal Government as a serious infringement upon the rights of the States and the liberties of the people.

Government should be kept as close as possible to the people themselves. This measure, upon which hearings are now being held before a subcommittee of another branch of the National Legislature, proposes to place this phase of government as far from the people as possible—in Washington. The fact that the Governors of nine of the oil-producing States believe it of such vital importance that they have appeared, or will appear, before the House subcommittee in opposition to this measure is an indication of the feeling of the people of those States which the Congress should not disregard.

I shall have more to say upon this subject if any such proposed legislation ever reaches the floor of the Senate. For the present, I merely desire to register my opposition to any proposed legislation which seeks to provide Federal regulation of the petroleum industry and to ask that the resolutions I have mentioned may be printed following my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions presented by the Senator from Kansas will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions are as follows:

KANSAS STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Topeka, Kans., February 3, 1940.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Enclosed is a resolution to which we would appreciate your attention. It relates to the Cole bill, H. R. 7372, which proposes the creation of a Federal oil authority. When we realize that the value of oil and gas production at the well in Kansas, even under rigid proration, plus lease and royalty payments, is ordinarily as much as the value of the State wheat crop at the farm, we are alarmed by anything which may disturb it.

Again, even if the resource involved were unimportant, or of small value, we feel that where there is an established State authority which is carrying the responsibility involved the Federal Government should be cautious in taking any steps. Generally speaking, the country suffers more from State evasion of responsibilities than from Federal invasion of States' rights. Where the majority of the affected States have assumed their responsibilities, as is the case in respect to conservation of oil and gas, the Federal Government should concern itself with devising means by which the few States that have failed to accept their responsibilities might be induced to do so, rather than concern itself with overlapping those States which are discharging their responsibilities.

Very truly yours,

SAMUEL WILSON.

Resolution of the Kansas State Chamber of Commerce to the Oil Subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce

Whereas H. R. 7372 proposes to authorize the creation of a Federal commissioner within the Department of the Interior to supervise and regulate the production of crude petroleum and natural gas within the several States; and

Whereas the State of Kansas, a major oil-producing State, has enacted and enforced adequate conservation laws since 1931 through a State agency which is experienced and capable in such matters; and

Whereas the broad power to engage in undertakings for the promotion of the general welfare is inherent in the States, while it is limited in the Federal Government to that which is effected by the power to tax; and

Whereas the States, through exercise of the power to prevent avoidable waste of irreplaceable natural resources, have regulated the production of petroleum and have thereby promoted the general welfare and prosperity of their citizens; and

Whereas an extension of Federal power to the control of production of petroleum would establish precedent for Federal usurpation of all powers of the several States in respect to all basic commodities, since all important commodities flow in interstate commerce; and

Whereas the enactment of H. R. 7372 would constitute an unreasonable, unnecessary, and unjustifiable duplication of functions of the Federal and State Governments, and such a policy would endanger and destroy the progress which has been attained under State control and would be detrimental to the welfare and prosperity of the people of Kansas: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Kansas State Chamber of Commerce (which has a membership representative of all classes of business and a majority of the local chambers of commerce of the State), That we hereby express our opposition to this type of legislation, or to any other form of Federal control, and express our confidence in the integrity and efficiency of the State Corporation Commission of the State of Kansas as an agency for dealing with the problems involved.

KANSAS STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
SAMUEL WILSON, Secretary.

JANUARY 26, 1940.

Whereas the Wichita Chapter of the American Petroleum Institute is fully aware of the great importance to the people of the United States of the petroleum resources of this country; and

Whereas the Wichita Chapter of the American Petroleum Institute earnestly believes that the American system of free enterprise is indispensable to the continuance in this country of the American form of government; and

Whereas the American petroleum industry in the past, without the payment to it of subsidies of any kind, has met all demands made upon it in times of war as well as peace, and in recent years has developed vast underground reserves which will enable the industry to meet all demands that may be made upon it for many years in the future, either in emergencies or peace times; and

Whereas all of the important oil-producing States in this country, with two exceptions, have already adopted conservation laws, and efforts are now being made by representatives of the industry in these two States to enact conservation laws in said States; and

Whereas it is the opinion of this body that House bill 7372 would result in transferring to a subordinate bureau of the Department of the Interior of the Federal Government, headed by an administrator with dictatorial power, control in the minutest degree of the production and transportation activities of the industry, which would soon affect all branches of the industry and seriously interfere with and impair the progress made by the conservation departments of the many States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Wichita Chapter of the American Petroleum Institute make this formal protest against the passage of House bill 7372 or legislation of a similar nature; be it further

Resolved, That the Wichita Chapter of the American Petroleum Institute make this further formal declaration: That it favors the enactment of conservation laws in all of the important oil-producing States in this country.

Resolutions of the Board of Directors of the Wichita Chamber of Commerce, Wichita, Kans.

To the Congress of the United States:

Whereas the petroleum industry has by its own enterprise, with the cooperation of the State governments, improved its methods of production, refining, and transportation, and has constantly diminished the amount of preventable waste, thus enabling it to more fully meet all regular and emergency demands made upon it in peace or in war; and

Whereas it is the opinion of the petroleum industry in the Wichita area that H. R. 7372 would obstruct rather than aid the cause of conservation, in that the regulation and control of the production and transportation activities of the oil industry by a bureau of the Federal Government would complicate and duplicate present supervision by the State regulatory agencies (which naturally have closer contact with and better understanding of the problems involved) and would create conflicts of authority and jurisdiction: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Board of Directors of the Wichita Chamber of Commerce in regular meeting assembled, That it oppose the passage of H. R. 7372 as being contrary to the best interests of the Nation, the States, the consuming public, and the petroleum industry.

Done at Wichita, Kans., this 17th day of January 1940.

WICHITA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE BOARD OF DIRECTORS,
J. WARD GALE, President.
G. W. BOOTH, General Manager.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

S. 2991. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to accept on behalf of the United States certain lands in the city of National City, Calif. (Rept. No. 1183); and

S. 2993. A bill to authorize an exchange of lands between the city of San Diego, Calif., and the United States, and acceptance by gift of certain lands from the city of San Diego, Calif. (Rept. No. 1184).

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 212) for an investigation of campaign expenditures of Presidential, Vice Presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1940 (submitted by Mr. GEORGE on January 10, 1940), reported it without additional amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY, pursuant to law, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers, to which were referred, for examination and recommendation, 11 lists of records transmitted to the Senate by The Archivist of the United States, which appeared to have no permanent value or historical interest, submitted reports thereon.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR BORAH

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate Resolution 223 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 223, submitted by Mr. CLARK of Idaho on February 1, 1940, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the Vice President in arranging for and attending the funeral of Hon. William E. Borah, late a Senator from the State of Idaho, upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PROPOSED LOAN TO FINLAND

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this morning the Committee on Foreign Relations ordered a report on the bill recently referred to it from the Banking and Currency Committee. I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized, during any adjournment or recess of the Senate, to report the action of the committee today in ordering a favorable report on the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, am I to understand that action was taken by the Foreign Relations Committee today?

Mr. BARKLEY. It was.

Mr. McNARY. And is it likely that the bill will be reported during the session of today?

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be reported today; but, if it should not be so reported, I desire the privilege of having it reported during the recess or adjournment of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection to the request. If we are to take action in the matter it should be done without further delay.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PITTMAN subsequently, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 3069) to provide for certain loans to the Republic of Finland by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, reported it with an amendment to the amendment heretofore reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and submitted a report (No. 1185) thereon.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I submit an amendment which may be proposed tomorrow when the Finnish-loan bill comes before the Senate. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD today as part of my remarks for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, after line 22, insert the following new section:

"Sec. 2. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to make loans to the Republic of Finland in an aggregate amount not to exceed the amount paid by such Republic on account of its obligations to the Government of the United States. Such loans shall be made for the purpose of enabling the Republic of Finland to finance the purchase of such articles and materials as it deems necessary, whether or not such articles and materials are the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States or any of its Territories or possessions, and all such loans shall be made on such terms and conditions as the Federal Loan Administrator shall prescribe. The Secretary of the Treasury shall reimburse the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in an amount equal to the amount of all loans made under this section to the Republic of Finland."

Mr. BROWN. I also ask that the amendment be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

Mr. BROWN. I also ask that a letter from the Treasury Department setting forth the present status of the indebtedness of the Finnish Government to the American Government, and the present status of the indebtedness of the Russian Government to the American Government, be printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 22, 1940.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Reference is made to your telephone inquiry of Mr. A. F. O'Donnell, Division of Research and Statistics of this Department, requesting information in regard to the indebtedness of the Governments of Finland and Russia to the United States Government.

The indebtedness of Finland arose from obligations received by the American Relief Administration for relief supplies furnished under an act of Congress approved February 25, 1919. The principal amount of such obligations was $8,281,926.17 and they originally bore interest at the rate of 5 percent. This rate was reduced to 4½ percent to December 15, 1922, under the funding agreement referred to below. The original obligations matured June 30, 1921.

An agreement for funding the indebtedness of Finland to the United States was entered into under date of May 1, 1923. Authorization to settle the indebtedness of the Republic of Finland to the United States as agreed upon was contained in an act of Congress approved March 12, 1924. Under the funding agreement the principal of the debt was to be paid in annual installments due December 15 each year over a 62-year period ending in 1984. Interest was made payable semiannually on unpaid balances on December 15 and June 15 of each year. The rate was 3 percent per annum from December 15, 1922, to December 15, 1932, and 3½ percent thereafter. A statement of amounts payable to the United States each year under the funding agreement is contained on page 126 of the enclosed copy of the combined annual reports of the World War Foreign Debt Commission. The combined annual reports also contain other information in regard to the Finnish debt which may be of interest.

Up to the fiscal year 1932 Finland regularly met the principal and interest on its debt as it came due under the funding agreement. Payments due during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1932, aggregating $312,295, including principal and interest, were postponed under the moratorium agreement of May 23, 1932, entered into pursuant to Public Resolution No. 5 approved December 23, 1931, authorizing such agreements with the various foreign governments indebted to the United States. The amount postponed, together with interest thereon at the rate of 4 percent per annum from July 1, 1933, was made payable by Finland in 10 equal annuities of $38,061, each payable in equal semiannual installments on December 15 and June 15 of each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year 1934.

Since the fiscal year 1933 the Government of Finland has regularly paid installments of principal, together with interest due under its debt-funding agreement and moratorium agreement. In other words, Finland is fully up to date with respect to amounts which have become due and payable under its debt agreements. A statement follows showing the original amount of the debt, the debt as funded, accruals of interest, payments of principal and interest, and the unpaid balance at the present time.

Original amount of indebtedness.....	$8,281,926.17
Interest accrued prior to funding.....	$1,027,389.10
Less interest paid prior to funding.....	309,315.27
	718,073.83
Total of debt as funded.....	9,000,000.00
Repayments of principal after date of funding.....	957,533.23
Present principal of debt.....	8,042,466.77
Accrued interest since date of funding.....	$4,724,866.71
Less interest paid since date of funding.....	4,624,443.27
	(a) 100,423.44

Indebtedness at present time..... 8,142,890.21

(a) Represents interest postponed under moratorium agreement and not yet due under such agreement.

The indebtedness of Russia to the United States arose from three sources, as follows:

Principal of Russian debt:
Advances under Liberty Bond Acts.....	$187,729,750.00
Surplus supplies sold on credit under an act of July 9, 1918.....	406,082.30
Relief supplies furnished on credit under an act of Feb. 25, 1919.....	4,465,465.07
	192,601,297.37
Interest due to Dec. 15, 1939.....	$211,141,106.97
Less payments applied to interest.....	8,750,311.88
	202,390,795.09

Amount of indebtedness Dec. 15, 1939..... 394,992,092.46

Repayments credited to the Russian debt represent the proceeds of liquidation of financial affairs of the Russian Government in this country. After the fall of the provisional government in November 1917, the Department of State and the Treasury entered into arrangements with the Russian Ambassador with a view to having assets of the Russian Government in this country applied toward payment of debts to American manufacturers, contractors, and the United States Government. Copies of letter dated May 23, 1922, from the Secretary of State and reply of the Secretary of the Treasury dated June 2, 1922, in regard to loans to the Russian Government and liquidation of affairs of the latter in this country appear in the combined annual reports of the World War Foreign Debt Commission as exhibit 2, page 84.

For your further information in regard to the war debts, there are also enclosed a memorandum covering the indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States, revised March 1, 1939; a statement showing the total indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States, December 15, 1939; a statement showing total payments received on account of indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States as of December 15, 1939; and pages 68 to 72 from the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1939, with regard to obligations of foreign governments.

Very truly yours,

D. W. BELL,

Under Secretary of the Treasury.

HON. PRENTISS M. BROWN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on February 6, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

- S. 323. An act for the relief of E. C. Beaver; and
- S. 766. An act for the relief of the Missoula Brewing Co.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. SMATHERS:

S. 3283. A bill to extend to closed building and loan associations and for the liquidation of assets of such associations the same assistance that is now extended to closed banks and for the liquidation of their assets; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RUSSELL:

S. 3284. A bill to amend section 77 of the Judicial Code, as amended, to create a new district in the State of Georgia, to be known as the north central district, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, the veterans of the United States when they borrow money from the Government on their insurance policies have to pay 5 percent interest. That money costs the Government from 1 percent down. The bill I am now introducing provides that hereafter the rate charged by the Government to the veterans shall not exceed 3 percent per annum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill of the Senator from Wisconsin will be received and appropriately referred.

By Mr. WILEY:

S. 3285. A bill to provide a maximum interest rate of 3 percent on loans secured by United States Government life insurance policies; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 3286. A bill for the relief of Oscar C. Olson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

S. 3287. A bill to convey certain lands to the State of Wyoming; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

S. 3288. A bill for the relief of William T. J. Ryan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MINTON:

S. 3289. A bill granting a pension to Willis Snow (with an accompanying paper);

S. 3290. A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Myrtle Snow (with an accompanying paper);

S. 3291. A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Elizabeth L. Jones (with an accompanying paper);

S. 3292. A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Alleda Handrick (with an accompanying paper);

S. 3293. A bill granting a pension to Mrs. Mary McCarty (with accompanying papers);

S. 3294. A bill granting a pension to Dorris K. Fitch (with accompanying papers);

S. 3295. A bill granting a pension to Gracie D. Maxey; and

S. 3296. A bill granting a pension to Isabel H. Maxey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3297. A bill granting a pension to Mary H. Stiers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MALONEY:

S. 3298. A bill for the relief of Richard L. Calder; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mrs. CARAWAY:

S. 3299. A bill for the relief of Jephtha John Arbaugh; and
S. 3300. A bill conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Arkansas to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of J. J. Hudson; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3301. A bill for the relief of William Edward Boileau; to the Committee on Finance.

S. 3302. A bill granting a pension to Rebecca E. Skaggs; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE:

S. 3303. A bill for the relief of James L. Kinney;

S. 3304. A bill for the relief of J. Frank Kuner, private, Uniformed Force, United States Secret Service;

S. 3305. A bill for the relief of Roy F. Lassly, former acting chief disbursing clerk, Department of the Interior;

S. 3306. A bill for the relief of Roy F. Lassly, former acting chief disbursing clerk, Department of the Interior;

S. 3307. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Mrs. A. R. Barnard, Charles A. Stephens, Donald W. Prairie, and dependents of Vern A. Needles," approved July 15, 1939;

S. 3308. A bill authorizing the Comptroller General to settle and adjust the claim of Robert E. Newton;

S. 3309. A bill authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claim of O'Brien Bros., Inc., New York City, N. Y.; and

S. 3310. A bill authorizing the Comptroller General of the United States to settle and adjust the claim of Morrison-Knudson Co., Inc., and W. C. Cole; to the Committee on Claims.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 1162, to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal, be recommitted to the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let the request be restated. I did not hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida desires the recommitment of a bill, the title of which will be stated by the clerk.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Calendar No. 157, Senate bill 1162, to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian officials and employees, citizens of the United States, engaged in and about the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the matter has been emphasized, I desire to explain that the bill relates to certain allowances for those who were engaged upon the Isthmus in the actual construction of the Panama Canal. The bill is on the Senate Calendar with a favorable report from the Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals. I desire to have the bill recommitted to the committee for the purpose of enabling it to consider certain amendments. Knowing the interest of the Senator from Oregon in the bill, I appreciate his inquiring about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENT TO INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BARBOUR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7922, the independent offices appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 70, lines 8 and 9, to strike out "and for construction of a dam near Lenoir City, Tenn.," and on page 70, line 20, to strike out "$40,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$39,000,000."

PRINTING OF COMPILATION OF CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration. The request calls for a brief word of explanation.

Since the organization of the Senate of the United States there have been approximately 130 contested-election cases. A first edition of these cases was compiled in 1885, and covered all cases prior to that date. A second edition was compiled which covered all cases from 1885 to 1893. A third edition covered all cases from 1893 to 1903. A fourth edition—which also included all previous compilations—covered all cases from 1903 to 1913.

Twenty-six contested-election cases have been before this body since 1913, and none of those cases have been compiled. It is of the utmost importance that the cases be carefully compiled and preserved for the guidance of Members of the future sessions of the Senate. It will be recalled that of the 26 cases that have occurred since the last compilation, 25 occurred since the adoption of the seventeenth amendment, providing for the direct election of Senators.

Therefore, following all the precedents and the usual procedure, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 229) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is hereby authorized to have compiled and printed for the use of the Senate a new edition of the work on Senate election cases, bringing the same down to the present Congress.

ELIZABETH COSBY YOUNGER

Mr. GLASS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 230), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Elizabeth Cosby Younger, widow of Thomas L. Younger, late custodian of the Senate Office Building, a sum equal to 1 year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 227, submitted by Mr. VANDENBERG on yesterday, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is requested to submit the following information to the Senate at its earliest convenience:

- (1) What foreign nations have generalized tariff reductions or other trade favors to the United States under the unconditional most-favored-nation policy, as a result of granting such concessions to others since 1934.
- (2) What are the benefits, if any, that have been thus generalized.
- (3) How many bilateral-trade agreements exist between other nations, and whom between.
- (4) Which of these bilateral-trade agreements, if any, have been negotiated since 1934.
- (5) Whether any of the concessions in these bilateral agreements, if any, have been generalized to the United States.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the resolution which I submitted yesterday has already achieved its purpose. I finally have a report from the United States Tariff Commission, and the need for the resolution is no longer apparent. Therefore I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan advise us of the date of the letter?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I did not look at the date. The letter was received this morning.

Mr. BYRNES. I was just wondering whether the Senator knew the date of the letter, in order that he might put it in the RECORD with his statement. I do not know its date, but I should like to know.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will say to the Senator that the letter apologizes for the failure to respond heretofore to my letter of January 17, and explains that the delay was due to the illness of one of the members of the Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be indefinitely postponed.

LETTER FROM HOOSIER TELEPHONE ASSOCIATION REGARDING NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, at this time, when all manner of charges are being made against the National Labor Relations Board, charging it especially with discrimination against so-called independent unions—those outside of the larger organizations—it is gratifying to receive from one of these organizations in my State a letter to the effect that no partiality has been shown so far as this organization is concerned.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter may be incorporated in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOOSIER TELEPHONE ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Indianapolis, Ind., January 5, 1940.

HON. SHERMAN MINTON,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: With practically all newspapers in the country carrying articles concerning the Smith investigation of the Labor Board it is certainly an opportune time to reflect the views of quite a few thousand people who reside and work in a goodly number of States and who are members of an independent union.

At the very outset we wish to impress you with the fact that we are not affiliated with either of the major labor organizations, and therefore there is no partisan or biased motive attached to our expressions. However, we are interested in the labor movement and do not condone anything or any action which affects or may affect the movement's growth.

Labor for many years has been in a very unfavorable position, and there does not seem to be much sense in returning such a large percentage of our citizens to their previous insecure and undesirable position.

For the Government, or any individual representative or group of representatives, at Washington to listen to real, reasonable criticism of a law is one thing, but for the same individual or group to temper their judgment with only one side of a picture is an entirely different matter and deserving of serious thought by those who seek real justice. The social legislation of the past few years is something which should not be undone by short-sighted people who may have an ax to grind or who unknowingly believe that "two wrongs will make a right."

The Smith investigation and some other recent newspaper reports appear to be very partisan and biased, and therefore any right-thinking legislator or other person should not be misled by the inference attached to such reports.

Because our labor organization is independent, we are normally classified, as are nearly all independents, as being on the outside fringe of the labor movement. However, our contacts with the National Labor Relations Board have always been friendly, and we are convinced that, by and large, the administrators of the act are sincere in their endeavor to cause better labor relations between employees and employers. Any attack, of repulsive nature, is clearly indicative of management support and should be terminated before irreparable damage is done to the entire enterprise system.

If my memory serves me correctly, the activities of the Labor Board have been distinctly helpful to business in general and, with but few exceptions, its decisions have been fair and equitable. The fact that some mistakes have been made by a few of the personnel is no reason to condone the entire structure, otherwise we, of labor, cannot look for any impartial protective aid in the future. To err is human has been emphasized by such learned scholars as the Supreme Court Justices when they reversed their own decisions on occasions. The same weakness is present in the administration of any act of Congress. Therefore the attack on the Wagner Act and its administration should not be too greatly emphasized until it has had a much longer period of trial.

Amendments to the act and insinuations about various people connected with its administration are becoming a daily habit and I might say that it appears as though some of our industrialists, legislators, and even labor leaders are making a hobby of tearing down a good work. This should be stopped until all parties concerned have had the opportunity to adjust themselves to the relatively new order.

From all that has been written on the subject one would naturally think two things; firstly, that employers are not getting proper consideration, and secondly, the Board is partial to the C. I. O.

Having had the opportunity to be interested in a number of cases before regional boards and having read with interest the various reports of the Board, we can unequivocally state that employers are getting more than the benefit of a doubt and, being independent, our opinion should have some weight when we say that our experience has taught us the Board does not favor one group as against another.

The wisest thing and the just thing would be to let the act alone and to make changes in the Board personnel in the same sensible manner that any other executive changes are made either in business or in other governmental appointments.

Sincerely yours,

LEO GEORGE,
President, Hoosier Telephone Association, Inc.

ORDER TO DISPENSE WITH CALL OF CALENDAR

The VICE PRESIDENT. The routine morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROPOSED LOAN TO FINLAND

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I rise to discuss briefly but very earnestly a subject which is much in the mind of everyone, yet one on which we seem to be having more difficulty than usual in making up our minds. I refer to the subject before the Congress and the people of this country—whether or not we shall help Finland financially; and if so, how we should extend the aid.

We have just learned that the Foreign Relations Committee acted today to approve an increase in the revolving fund of the Export-Import Bank of Washington as a prelude to a Finnish loan, which I assume this institution would make if Congress acted favorably on this plan. This is splendid so far as it goes, but I still fear we may from now on move too slowly. The Senate should act and at once.

LXXXVI—72

I feel very strongly that time is of the essence; that Congress should act immediately; and it is with this in mind more than to advocate or oppose any particular proposal that I bring up the subject, for, with all due respect to the committee, I cannot resist the observation that I hope most earnestly they will bring this question before the Senate as soon as possible.

My own personal view is that even if no other consideration were involved, Finland has earned the right again to receive financial aid from this Nation. Finland alone honored her financial obligations to this country, and, by the same token, has merited the right to again seek financial aid in her hour of desperate need and martyrdom. If we fail to recognize this, Finland can feel with justice that her integrity and honesty not only have gone unrewarded, but actually she would have been better off financially to have kept for herself, as did all the other nations, the money she paid back to the United States each day on the day it was due.

Moreover, it seems obvious to me that if we do not accord Finland the financial aid to which I think she is entitled, for the reasons I have given, others may well feel that they did the smart thing in their own selfish interest in not living up to their obligations to this country, in that they are no worse off than the one country which paid its debts to us. To put it differently, if Finland's integrity and honesty are to profit her nothing in her hour of dire need, what incentive would there be for anyone ever to pay anything that is owed to us?

Mr. President, entirely aside from this credit standing, which I feel Finland has so justly earned, we must, of course, consider whether or not it is compatible with the best interests of the United States to make a further loan to that country. With respect to this equally important consideration, I feel that it is indeed certain that our best interests do not lie in the success of the ruthless aggressor who is wantonly attempting to destroy Finland.

More important than anything else, no one can justify the assertion that to help Finland financially at this time is a step toward war. This is simply not so. No one is more alert against any move in that direction than myself. How could it be unless we wish to take that step which, of course, most certainly we do not and will not take?

Moreover, further financial aid to Finland at this time sets no precedent for extending the same aid in any other quarter, for in Finland's case alone imminent and desperate need is coupled with absolute assurance, based on actual experience, that if it is humanly possible they will repay every cent. I feel, too, that in according Finland the financial aid she so urgently needs at this time, in whatever amounts and whatever manner the Congress may decide on, it should be given not only at once but without any hampering restrictions as to how and where the money should be spent.

It is not my purpose to either make a long plea or an impassioned one based on sentimentality, but I am simply stressing my own conviction that we should do something for Finland, and, by the same token, I urge that this be done with all possible dispatch, and that we act as promptly as possible now, following the action of the committee.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I concur most heartily in the remarks just made by my distinguished colleague the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR]. I think it is high time that Congress act on this important subject, and I am delighted to express my concurrence in the sentiments uttered by him.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7922) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment on page 9, line 9, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 9, line 9, it is proposed to strike out "$12,000,000" and to insert "$11,000,000", so as to read:

Maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities: For all necessary expenses of the Office of the Administrator and the operation and maintenance of air-navigation facilities, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; purchase (including exchange), operation, maintenance, repair, and overhaul of aircraft; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $13,550), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles; purchase of special wearing apparel and equipment for aviation purposes (including snowshoes and skis); salaries and traveling expenses of employees detailed by the Administrator to attend courses of training conducted by the Government or industries serving aviation; not to exceed 3 cents per mile for travel, in their personally owned automobiles within the limits of their official posts of duty, of employees engaged in the maintenance and operation of remotely controlled air-navigation facilities; and for the purchase of necessary food supplies (not exceeding $2,500) for storage at isolated stations for emergency use, the cost of which when consumed by employees shall be collected therefrom, and deposited in miscellaneous receipts; $11,000,000.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, addressing myself to the item under consideration in the bill now pending, which is an amendment of the Committee on Appropriations reducing the appropriation from $12,000,000 to $11,000,000 under the heading "Maintenance and operation," I will not detain the Senate long lest my remarks today might be a repetition of what I had occasion to say yesterday. I have again conferred with the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and I assert that if this reduction in the appropriation should be made and becomes effective, there is no question the program heretofore authorized, and for which appropriations were made, namely, for the installation of safety devices on the airways of this country as rapidly as possible, would be greatly impeded. There can be no question that safety devices of all kinds, provided by the mandate of the Congress of the United States, and for the installation of which appropriations were made, would remain unmanned and uncared for, and would either have to be stored where the elements will not destroy them, or some other means would have to be taken to protect them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am informed by the Civil Aeronautics Authority that so far as concerns 3,300 miles of airway protection now under construction, and to be completed before the end of the fiscal year 1941, most of it within the calendar year 1940, if this reduction should be made, there not only would not be sufficient money to operate those facilities, but there would be no money to pay for watchmen to protect them.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am grateful to the Senator because I was about to make that point.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is all right. There would be no money with which to operate or do anything with them, except to leave them where they are, out in the elements, unprotected.

Mr. President, that is not the worst of this matter however. Congress, as result of a most careful investigation at the hands of Members of this body, and at the hands of the committee headed by our beloved colleague, the late Senator Copeland, set up a program, declared we would carry out that program, and have carried it out. Last year the greatest amount ever appropriated was made available in an effort to see to it that the program for providing safety facilities in the air, as set up by this body and by the other House, should be carried out.

That being true, Mr. President, however much we would economize, this is no time for Congress to turn back, when by turning back we would not only impair the program we adopted, but likewise would lose the money already appropriated. When I say we would lose the money, I mean that it would be a loss if we permitted this equipment to be unmanned and unprotected.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has given thought to the details of this matter, I am sure, and will be glad to enlighten me. The inference I draw from the hearings before the Senate committee is that there would be 45 new stations, or whatever they are called—

Mr. McCARRAN. Air lines.

Mr. ADAMS. Forty-five new air lines put into operation under the program, under the appropriation for construction, and that it is planned to take on 519 employees. That was the maximum.

Mr. McCARRAN. I thought the number was 635, but the Senator may refer to a different figure.

Mr. ADAMS. I have gotten the figures in the last few minutes.

Mr. McCARRAN. I notice in one place Mr. Hester said there would be 635 new personnel.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say that I have before me an amplification of some of the testimony, furnished me by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, which I intend to put into the RECORD.

Mr. ADAMS. I gather from the statement that there are 4 men to a station, in some larger stations perhaps more; so if we take the figure of 45 new stations, and figure 4 men in each, which would be sufficient personnel to protect them, there would be 180 men. If we should pay those men $1,500 a year, which I think perhaps is a fair average, it would take $270,000. If we should pay them $2,000 on an average, it would take $360,000. If we should take the whole 519 new men, all of whom would not serve the full year, because the program will not be instantly completed at the beginning of the fiscal year, and if we should pay those men $1,500 a year, we would have to pay $728,000. There is an increased appropriation of $1,500,000. I am unable to see why one and a half million dollars will not take care of the increased personnel required to carry out the program. I make that as a statement rather than as an inquiry.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in reply to the able Senator from Colorado I wish to say that, as I gather from reading the hearings and from information which has come to me from members of the Authority, the question is not merely that of increase of one and a half million dollars, but the carrying out of a program heretofore authorized. If the program is carried out as it should be carried out, and these air lines are established with all proper safeguards and safety devices, and if the money already appropriated for the current year is used within the current year, as it is said it will be, for the installation of this equipment, and no additional money is provided, then, notwithstanding the figures which the Senator used, the equipment would remain unmanned and unused. If it is unmanned it is out of use.

I again return to the subject of economy. I will join in a program of economy, but, in my judgment, we can be parsimonious rather than economical. If I may make use of a very homely expression, and one which is not entirely apropos, we may be "penny-wise and pound-foolish."

Mr. President, when we have established a program which has effected such remarkable results as have been effected in the matter of air travel, with nearly 600,000,000 passenger-hours flown in America without a single fatality—and that achievement is due to the program set up under the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938—I say when we have established a national program of that kind and have achieved such wonderful results, we should not hesitate to appropriate an additional sum of $1,000,000 toward continuing the program. However much we would save the money of the Government, however much we would retrench, however much we might seek economy, we must realize that the proposed reduction is not true economy.

The fact of the matter is that it is no economy. As a matter of fact, by carrying out this program we shall not only establish a system which will place our country ahead of every other country in the world in the way of air navigation and air commerce, but likewise this $1,000,000, if used as it is intended it shall be used under the program, will strengthen our defenses, for every time we establish one of these air lines we will fortify our country.

Mr. President, every pilot who flies the air today is a potential warrior in time of war. The pilot who flies over this country today is better equipped to take hold of the controls, should his country call upon him in time of war, than any other man who could be selected. He needs no training. He knows the terrain. He knows the air currents. He knows the weather conditions. While we are developing the country from a commercial standpoint, and while we are improving air traveling conditions, we are likewise developing the country from a military standpoint. The dollars expended along this line will serve two purposes: One, to develop the country from within; and the other, to fortify and equip the country for its defense in time of war.

Mr. President, I was sorry to have the Senate act adversely on the two items voted upon yesterday, but I appeal to the Senate today to restore the amount in the item under consideration, because I want to see this program go forward. I do not want to see human lives lost in the great development of air travel. I do not want to see any other Member of this body perhaps lose his life in the air. I do not want to see any other outstanding citizen numbered among the dead by reason of failure to provide safety devices. I do not want to see a catastrophe occur simply for lack of the amount in question.

I wish to see this program go forward along sane, sensible, sound lines. If ever a commission was appointed by a President which carried out the spirit and intention of the law, certainly the Civil Aeronautics Authority has carried out the part assigned to it, and has made a great and outstanding success.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Transportation by air between the East and the West is growing rapidly. I have been amazed at its growth in the last 5 years. I am curious to know if the million dollars which is proposed to be deducted from this item in any way involves the safety of transportation by air. If we reduce the amount from $12,000,000 to $11,000,000, will it in any way imperil the lives of those who travel, or will it add to the hazard of travel by air? I wish the Senator would address himself to that feature and specifically point out—I know he is able to do so—the relation between safety and the $1,000,000 which it is proposed to deduct from the amount to be given the Authority.

Mr. McCARRAN. I will try to make myself clear. Congress directed that a certain system of airways should be established. The law provides that whenever the Post Office Department calls for the transportation of mail over certain lines, then the Civil Aeronautics Authority must immediately take steps to see to it that mail is carried over those lines. Congress provided that this system should include the establishment of safety devices such as lighting, radio beams, and the protective devices for landing fields, and so on, including what is known as the teletype. All of that, Mr. President, is largely mechanical. These are mechanical devices set up along the lines of flight. Sometimes they serve a dual purpose. In other words, one beacon may be a guide to two air lines, which is very frequently the case. But when the mechanical devices, which are provided for, as I have stated, by appropriations already made, are set up, then they must be manned. Personnel is necessary to man them. For instance, a beacon light having a certain candlepower or a certain intensity must be manned perhaps by 1 man or 2 men, and in some instances the operation of certain mechanical devices requires, I am told, as many as 15 men. But we must have the necessary personnel, which personnel would be cut off by the elimination of the $1,000,000 in question. We must have personnel to man equipment already installed. That is what I want to make plain as best I can; we must have the personnel required to make effective the mechanical devices for which Congress appropriated a year ago, and which have been up to date installed or will be installed before the end of the fiscal year. If those devices stand out in the open, in the elements, as they are now throughout the country, and remain undermanned, then they are simply a loss to everyone.

Mr. President, I do not care to take the time of the Senate any longer. To me the matter is very important. I think more has been accomplished for aviation by the Civil Aeronautics Act, 1938, than was accomplished in half a century before. I want to see aviation go forward. I want to see it go forward in an orderly manner. It cannot go forward in an orderly manner unless we carry out the orderly procedure of seeing to it that safety to human life and to property is guaranteed by every means that human hands can afford.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, it has been my purpose all along, and is now, and will continue to be, to support our regularly constituted committees in every instance that I possibly can. In this case I shall not be able to go along with the Appropriations Committee, recommending the reduction of this item for maintenance and operation of air navigation facilities from $12,000,000 to $11,000,000. Such a reduction would gravely affect the progress of aeronautics in my State. Two very important air lines have been established there in the past 2 years, one from Tallahassee down the west coast to Tampa and Miami, and another from Jacksonville to New Orleans. The Government has gone to the expense of establishing beacon or beam lights along the way for the safety of navigation. They will be of no use if they are not maintained.

The committee amendment, if adopted, would eliminate the maintenance of those beacon lights on those airways.

I am interested in this item for another reason. I happen to be on a committee with the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], and we considered our aeronautics measures very carefully after consuming much time in taking testimony. The system is now progressing fairly well, and I would not like to see this most important activity curtailed.

I also happen to be a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, which has provided a program involving the appropriation of over $1,000,000,000 to provide for us one of the greatest defense programs, not only to include battleships on the seas and submarines under the seas, but providing for our defense one of the finest naval air units that can be devised by the ingenuity of man.

In my judgment, that money, if properly spent—and I am sure it will be, because it is in the hands of our experts—will perhaps in the ultimate save this country from a conflict which we do not want to enter. If in 1917 we had had the Navy which we are now providing on the sea, in the air, and under the sea, and which we propose to perfect within the next 2 years, we, more than likely, would never have entered the great World War. We were forced into it because the German Government knew we were not prepared; and it was more than a year before we ever flew an airplane or used a gun manufactured in the United States. If we had not been drawn into that conflict the indications are that this country would have saved, up to this time, more than $30,000,000,000.

I am one of those who believe that an ounce of prevention is worth not only a pound of cure but, in matters of preparedness, more than that. Recently there landed in my home city of Orlando more than 600 pilots with their planes. This activity was a part of the annual tournament sponsored and encouraged by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

We cannot turn back now. We are manufacturing many airplanes to be used in both the Army and the Navy. We want the finest brains of the country to be trained to operate them. In promoting aeronautics we are not only preparing to place America in the forefront of commercial aviation, with its many great advantages to us nationally and internationally, but we are also preparing the people of the country for any eventuality in case democracy breaks down in Europe. Our aircraft will constitute our first line of defense.

Mr. President, I could give other reasons why I would prefer not to see the committee amendment prevail, but I shall not take the time of the Senate now to present them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to call attention briefly to a thought suggested by the remarks of the Senator from Florida; namely, the connection of this matter with the problem of national defense.

This debate has proceeded almost exclusively upon the question of the aid rendered by aviation safety facilities to the air lines of the United States and the building up of the traffic of the air lines of the United States, both passenger and mail flights. I wish very briefly to call attention to the fact that these facilities are not only used by the air lines of the United States for the protection of the passengers on the air lines and the freight shipped on the air lines, but they are now used every day of the year to a very large and considerable extent by the Army and National Guard planes and the Navy and Marine Corps planes of the United States provided for the purpose of national defense, and also to a very large extent by private commercial planes not connected with air lines, and by private planes being flown for various reasons.

Of course, a great many of the airplanes use the Federal airways without any record being made of them, since only contacts between aircraft and the Civil Aeronautics Authority airway traffic control create any accurate record. However, such as the records are, during the fiscal year 1939 the total number of aircraft movements—that is, take-offs and landings—controlled by airway traffic control amounted to 403,980. Of this total 241,884, or 59.9 percent, were airway-carrier operations, while 162,000, or 40.1 percent, were nonair carriers of all types.

A further segregation was made for a sample week, the week of January 6, 1940. During that week a total of 17,470 aircraft movements were controlled, or at the rate, based upon the sample week, of more than 900,000 a year. Of that total, 10,339 were air-carrier movements. This is 59.2 percent of the total. The fact that this percentage agrees so closely with the air-carrier percentage for the previous fiscal year suggests that the sample week taken is a fair one.

The total distribution of the traffic-controlled movements for that week was: Air carriers, 10,339, or 59.2 percent; Army and National Guard planes, 5,769, or 33 percent; Navy and Marine Corps planes, 672, or 3.8 percent; private and non-scheduled commercial planes, 690, or 4 percent.

So, Mr. President, it is apparent that these facilities are necessary and valuable not only for the safety of the public traveling on our air lines, but also for the protection and safety of Government vessels, many of which are engaged in the national defense or in preparation for the national defense.

Mr. President, on yesterday the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], being in possession of the floor, proceeded without giving me a chance to reply, refusing to yield to me to make reference to some statements which I had made upon the floor of the Senate within the year in criticism of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Unlike the Senator from Kansas, I yield.

Mr. REED. In 30 seconds after the Senator from Missouri asked me to yield I yielded to the Senator from Missouri, and he stated in the Record that he desired to take the floor in his own right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that after making a considerable speech and yielding to several other Senators he finally did say he would yield to me; but he flatly refused to yield to me at the time he made reference to me—something I have never yet done upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. REED. If I may make a suggestion, I asked the Senator to wait just a moment and I would yield to him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, be that as it may, it is not important. The fact is that when the reorganization bill was under consideration in the Senate I supported the proposition of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], in charge of the bill, that the Civil Aeronautics Authority ought not to be exempted from the general authority of the President to combine bureaus or consolidate their functions. I pointed out the very large growth of the Civil Aeronautics Authority in the short time it had been constituted, and criticized, not only on the floor but in other places, the fact that the Civil Aeronautics Authority had taken over bodily one of the most inefficient bureaus of the Government, the old Bureau of Air Commerce in the Commerce Department, and had not cleaned up that Bureau by discharging many who had been working for it. That criticism was good at that time, Mr. President. I adhere to it. Part of it is still good, although the Civil Aeronautics Authority has made a great improvement in the matter of cleaning up its personnel.

Be that as it may, Mr. President; that has nothing whatever to do with the question involved in the pending amendment. The amendment has to do with the question of the safety of those who fly in American planes in the United States. It has to do with the efficiency of a system which Congress directed the Civil Aeronautics Authority to install, which it has installed, and which it has been operating with notable success. It has to do with the question of whether or not the system planned and ordered by Congress as the result of the investigations of the Copeland committee, which was originally constituted following the tragic death of a distinguished Member of this body, shall be carried out and put into full and complete operation.

I stated a moment ago, on the authority of the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, that if the reduction of $1,000,000 takes place, 3,300 miles of facilities already in process of installation under authority and direction of Congress will have no appropriation for their operation.

Much has been said about the increase in personnel. I do not wish to be tedious with the Senate; but, since so much has been said about that matter, I wish to point out what the increase in personnel amounts to in relation to airway safety installation, having to do not with bureaucrats in Washington, but with safety of travel in the air. I wish to point out why that increase in personnel is necessary and desirable as the result of the increase in the facilities which have been installed and are being installed by direction of the Congress.

The increase in the number of personnel provided for in the appropriation for maintenance and operation of air navigation facilities for 1941 over that provided for in the allotment out of salaries and expenses of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for 1940 for that purpose, as well as the increase in other items of expense, is due to the increase in extent of the Federal airways safety system, involving primarily an increase in number and type of aids to air navigation which require personnel for their operation, maintenance, and supervision, and secondarily a resultant increase in the volume of work at certain of the hitherto existing stations necessitating increased personnel complements at some of the important points.

Mr. President, I take it to be a proposition so simple that no one will controvert it, that safety installation over a railroad system or an ocean transportation system involving thousands of miles, say, 10,000 miles, requires a greater personnel for its operation and its protection and its repair and its care than a system of 500 miles or a thousand miles. It does not matter what form of transportation it may be, the greater the safety installation the greater its extent, the greater its complexity the greater its meticulousness, the greater the number of personnel required.

The construction appropriation for the establishment of air-navigation facilities in 1940—the current fiscal year—in the amount of $7,000,000 was the largest ever granted for this purpose. Consequently the resultant increase in the extent of the Federal airway system is more marked than ever before.

The principal features of the physical increase due to construction work being accomplished in 1940 and the accompanying increases in personnel for operation and maintenance are as follows—and this is the explanation of the increase in personnel asked for in connection with this safety system:

Lighted airways mileage, an increase of 4,590 miles in the fiscal year, requiring an additional personnel, according to the Civil Aeronautics Authority, of 93 persons. Included in the lighted airways mileage are 41 landing fields and 288 beacon lights.

Standard radio range and communication stations, 47 units, requiring a personnel, according to the Civil Aeronautics Authority, of 258.

Other types of radio stations, 162, requiring an additional personnel of 140. A break-down of the figures for the 162 units show 95 ultra-high-frequency fan markers, 9 ultra-high-frequency radio ranges, 55 ultra-high-frequency zone markers, and 3 transoceanic communication stations.

There are 10 new instrument landing stations, requiring an additional personnel of 5.

Teletype communications system mileage, 4,470, broken down into 32 teletype stations at radio ranges, and 14 independent teletype stations, requiring, according to the Civil Aeronautics Authority, an additional personnel of 63.

Three new traffic-control centers, requiring an additional personnel of 33.

The new Washington National Airport—and the present one has been a disgrace and menace to the United States for years—will require an additional personnel of 38 operators.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Can the Senator inform us as to the cost of the new Washington Airport?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am unable to supply the Senator with the figure, although I will be glad to get it for him and furnish it to him later.

Installation of air-navigation facilities along new routes inevitably creates greater volume of work, particularly in communications and airways traffic control, at the stations on the old routes which become the junction points with the new routes, and this together with the tremendous increase in air traffic of all types—commercial, military, and private—bring about the need for added communications and traffic control operations personnel at hitherto existing stations to the extent of 155.

It will be remembered, Mr. President, that prior to the fiscal year 1940 there were no Federal air-navigation aids whatever in Alaska, but this year installation of such aids is in process. It is necessary also to establish a regional headquarters office and repair depot to administer and supervise the maintenance and operation of these aids, which will require an additional personnel of 31.

In addition to the increased personnel assigned directly to the various type of aids, and the new Alaska headquarters office and repair depot, increased administrative and supervisory personnel are required in the Washington office and in the seven regional headquarters offices and repair depots on account of the increased work involved in administration, supervision, and inspection of the greatly increased airways system. These are distributed as follows:

Office of Administrator, one.

Airways Engineering Division, Washington, 50, 40 of whom for the past year or two have been employed and paid from another appropriation, namely, a W. P. A. allotment, so that the real increase in personnel in this case is only 10.

The Airways Operation Division in Washington requires an increased personnel, despite the vast extension of the system, of only five.

The seven regional headquarters offices and repair depots require an increase in personnel of 61.

The central radio repair and supply depot at Fort Worth requires an additional personnel of 32, of which a number have already been employed under other appropriations.

The total additional personnel required for the increased facilities since the close of the fiscal year 1939 is 965. Obviously the 1940 construction activities are of the continuing type, and many of the stations are completed and ready for operation during the course of the fiscal year. As these stations are completed people are immediately employed and assigned to their operation with funds available in the allocation out of Salaries and Expenses, Civil Aeronautics Authority, 1940, for maintenance and operation of air-navigation facilities. Thus provision has been made for employing during such parts of fiscal year 1940, as they may be required, 438—including the 72 in Airways Engineering Division and central depot, which are transfers, not actual increases—of the total of 965, leaving to be employed on or after the beginning of fiscal year 1941, 527, which is the net increase for the operation of the air-safety program.

Mr. President, I assume that no one will assert that it would be to the interest of any railroad corporation to install a fine signal safety system over its entire route and then not provide adequate and intelligent personnel for its operation. Certainly it would not be to the interest of the Government of the United States to establish lighthouses and other safeguards for navigation and then not supply a sufficient personnel and a sufficient appropriation for their proper operation, inspection, maintenance, and repair. Certainly it would not be to the interest of a great railroad system to build a fine terminal and then to be niggardly with the last half mile of the approaches leading into the terminal, or to install a system for an automatic control of trains coming into the terminal and then not provide sufficient funds for its operation and maintenance.

As I said on yesterday, Mr. President, I feel very strongly that the ghastly condition of the air safety aids in this country was ultimately revealed by reason of the fact that a Member of this body was killed. Heaven knows how long that condition might have continued but for the death of Senator Cutting. It seems to me that the death of any other citizen flying over the air lines of this country is fully as important as is the death of a United States Senator, and I hope that it may not be necessary to have further accidents in this country in order to assure the completion of the air-safety program.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to say that I am in complete agreement with the distinguished Senators from Missouri, Nevada, and Wyoming as to safety.

Being curious about the Civil Aeronautics Authority, I obtained their first annual report. So far as I have talked with Members of this body, I have not yet found anybody who has read it. I have. Here is a map in the report of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. Every main line in this country is lighted now, has been, and will continue to be.

So much for that.

I desire to congratulate the Senators who had a part in improving the air service by the creation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I have no criticism to offer of them. When this matter came up yesterday, I had not read their full report. I read it last night; and if any Senator can take the report and find in it any excuse for the expenditure of money for the purpose stated by the Senators who are opposed to the action of the committee, they have the advantage of me. I cannot find in the report a single word which justifies it.

There are some things in the report that should interest the Senate. It is true, as stated by the Senators from Missouri and Nevada, that we have made heavy appropriations for aeronautical purposes. Does the Senate know that last year, in addition to such appropriations made by Congress, $40,000,000 of relief funds were expended on airports and their improvement?

I read from page 14 of the First Annual Report of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for 1939:

Absence, during the year under discussion, of any formal national airport policy did not mean, of course, lack of Federal participation in airport projects. During the period covered by this report approximately $40,000,000 of Federal relief funds were expended upon the enlargement and improvement of some 307 airports throughout the country. Local sponsorship and participation increased total expenditures on these projects to approximately $62,300,000.

Mr. President, it is easy to let one's enthusiasm for a certain cause run away with his best judgment; and that is the only point to which I am addressing myself. All that I say is predicated upon the first annual report of the Civil Aeronautics Authority itself.

There ought to be some relationship between money expended and the results obtained. I said yesterday, and reiterated in response to the question of the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH], that in the initial phases we had subsidized every different kind of transportation in this country. We subsidized water in the first place; we subsidized railroads in the second place; we subsidized highways in the third place; and we are now subsidizing aeronautics, to what extent? Let me tell the Senate to what extent we are subsidizing aeronautics.

Again I refer to the report of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. On page 51 they report the revenues from air traffic. There is a large amount of detailed information in the report that would not be of any interest, and it would be impossible to put it into the Record. I call attention, however, to these high lights:

In addition to the appropriation made by the Congress, there was expended on airports last year $62,000,000. The Government paid the air companies for carrying the mails—I read now from page 51 of the report—$16,669,197.21. I am not saying whether that is too much or too little or just sufficient. It cost approximately $2 per ton-mile. That is what we pay the air companies for carrying the mails; and they collected $16,000,000. All their other business combined, according to this report, amounted to $30,650,694.83.

The appropriation carried by this bill alone runs over $26,000,000, almost equal to the gross revenue of the air carriers, in addition, without the mail pay from the Government for which the Government received service. If we add the Government payment of $16,000,000, the Government, through appropriations and by mail pay last year, paid $42,000,000, while all the other business of the air companies—I am referring to gross revenue, not net revenue—was $30,000,000.

So far as I know, we have never subsidized any other business in this country—transportation or anything else—almost to the full extent of its gross revenues from every other source. For airplanes we provide airports, we provide runways, we provide radio beams, we maintain radio stations, we operate some thousands of miles of teletype service. We do everything for them. I do not mean to say that they do not pay anything in the way of fees for the use of airports. As a matter of fact, in this report it is said, and, in addition, the Civil Aeronautics Authority this morning gave me some information to the same effect, that on the average they pay about $50 per month for scheduled flights for the use of airports for landing.

What is the result? I desire to illustrate from my own experience. Within the past week I flew from here to Kansas City and flew back again, for the purpose of saving time. I paid for the round trip about $101. It is about 2,400 miles, according to the aircraft schedule. I paid about 4 cents a mile, but I saved a great deal of time. I did not pay all my fare. The Government of the United States, through subsidies to the air carriers, paid half of my fare, and I paid only the other half.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Of course, the Senator realizes that when he drives his automobile from here to Kansas City and back he pays his gasoline bill, but he does not pay for the highway he uses; and the Government probably pays a larger proportion of his actual expenses than it pays in the case of the air lines. Of course, the subsidy days of the railroads are gone. In the old days in the West I dare say that the railroads received substantial subsidies which would compare with the subsidy that is being paid for air-line transportation today; but it is a peculiar thing that once an industry gets a subsidy it gets a monopoly, and it does not want anybody else to have it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, my friend from Idaho knows the declaration I made on this floor in the debate over the General Transportation Act, representing my own views, because they are not included in the act—that whenever highways created by funds from the Public Treasury, whether air or land or railroad or rivers, are used for commercial purposes to make a profit, the user should pay a toll which will reasonably reimburse the taxpayer for his money. I say that about airways. The Government of the United States has no business and no right in equity to take the taxpayer's money and pay half the expense of my own trip to Kansas City.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think we can all agree to the general proposition announced by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. I hope the Senator from New Mexico will vote that way.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Whether we like it or not, Congress has created a Civil Aeronautics Authority. The question in my mind is, Does the Senator from Kansas want to let that Authority carry on in order to effectuate the purposes Congress had in mind, or shall we curtail it to such an extent that it will be ineffective?

Mr. REED. Let me say to the Senator from New Mexico that if the recommendation of the committee is accepted and adopted, the Civil Aeronautics Authority will have a million and a half more dollars for the next fiscal year than they have for the present fiscal year under the item recommended by the committee; and, in my opinion, that is amply adequate.

The Senator from New Mexico is one of the ablest Senators on this floor.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REED. He knows that a Government bureau or department always regards itself as the most important; and in a burst of enthusiasm—and this time to my very regret—their enthusiasm is supported by some overenthusiastic Members of the Senate, whose fears, in my opinion, are wholly unfounded. I think we can accept every recommendation of the committee without in any way restricting or curtailing any useful purpose which the Civil Aeronautics Authority has to carry on. What I am trying to do, and all I am trying to do, is to take care of the taxpayers' money, as much as a minority Senator can do that.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I wish to assure the Senator from Kansas that it is the desire of the Senator from New Mexico to cut down expenses every time we can do it intelligently. I wish to assure the Senator from Kansas that I am one of those overenthusiastic air-minded people.

Mr. REED. I feared the Senator from New Mexico might be one of them.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I still maintain that during these days, when we are talking about national defense, it will not be very long before every Member of this body will be overenthusiastic about national defense as afforded by airplanes.

Mr. REED. If I may say so to the Senator from New Mexico, we appropriated during the last session about $800,000,000 for the War Department Air Service, and I have forgotten the figures for the Navy Department. They train their own pilots. The report of the Civil Aeronautics Authority states that at the beginning of the fiscal year—and I am giving these figures from memory—there were about 21,000 or 22,000 qualified pilots in the commercial service. Those figures do not include the military or naval service. That number increased last year about 8,000, so that there are now approximately 30,000 qualified pilots.

There is no relation between commercial flying and national defense except possibly in one respect. I think it is a healthy thing that the Army and the Navy may have the benefit of any improvements made by manufacturers of commercial planes, and also the use of a trained force of pilots which has now reached the number of 30,000 men.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I think it is a very fine thing for the national defense of the country that the commercial airplane companies can train pilots who may be available in time of emergency. It is also a good thing that we have made such progress in commercial flying in this country that it is heralded throughout the world.

I maintain that our national defense in the future will not be the Navy, or battleships, or anything else, but the airplanes of the future and what we have now. Hence I am for anything that may be done for the making of better pilots and for bringing about of technical improvements in this field.

I agree with the Senator that we should cut down expenses, but to my mind making a cut in an appropriation which is absolutely essential is not the right kind of economy. I am in favor of cutting to the limit Government expenses in items which may be wasteful, but the airplane business is new, and we cannot judge of airplane matters or the business of developing airplanes by the railroads or the highways any more than we can go back to the times of the tallow candle. We have to face the world as it is today. I believe that we cannot do too much in this country for this service, and that we will not be wasting anything if we shall provide the necessary funds for an authority of the Government created by us.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not quarreling with the Senator from New Mexico in his last statement. Let me ask him a question: Did he ever hear of any business in this country, the transportation business or any other business, that was subsidized by the Government to the full extent of its gross revenue?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I respect the Senator from Kansas too much to answer that question.

Mr. REED. I publish a newspaper. I wish the Government would subsidize me in the gathering of news, and the transmission of news, and all that sort of thing, so that all I had to do would be to print and distribute my newspaper.

Mr. CHAVEZ. How much does the Senator from Kansas pay for mailing the newspapers to his subscribers?

Mr. REED. I should be very happy to tell the Senator if it had any part in this debate. I pay enough.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REED. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to draw his attention to one matter. My observation grows out of a remark he made not long ago, and I should like to invite his attention to the time in 1934 when we canceled the contracts for carrying the mails by air.

Mr. REED. Let me interrupt the Senator to say that it was his administration, not mine, that did that.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am not talking about administrations; I am talking about facts.

Mr. REED. There is a good deal of error about the Senator's administration.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is all right; we are trying to perform our duty. If I could get the Senator from Kansas to join with me for this $12,000,000 appropriation, I would feel that I had performed my duty.

At the time to which I refer, the Government undertook to fly the mail with Army fliers. Eleven of the finest boys in the Army lost their lives at that time. I now draw the Senator's attention to the fact that those lives were snuffed out, in an attempt to fly the mail, because proper safety devices were not then in existence. Otherwise those boys would not have been sacrificed. They were turned loose to carry the mail over terrain about which they knew nothing whatever, through air currents of which they had never been advised, and the result was crash after crash, until 11 of them were killed within some 6 weeks.

If safety devices such as we have been installing under the appropriations made by Congress had been installed at that time the lives of 11 fine boys would have been saved.

I draw this matter to the attention of the Senator before he takes his seat because it illustrates the very thing we are trying to do here, namely, to carry out a program which has enlisted this comment from a President of the United States:

The air lines have performed a marvelous service, flying 500,000,000 passenger-miles without a single fatality.

I want the Senator to dwell on that, because he mentioned the $300,000,000 we appropriated for military aviation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, my answer to the Senator from Nevada is that the things about which he speaks as having happened in 1934 have no relevancy whatever to the present situation.

I have no quarrel with all reasonable appropriations which ought to be made for safety in aeronautics. I do have a quarrel with overenthusiasm which takes the taxpayers' money to give me a personal benefit such as I have had in the last week or 10 days. I do not think we have any right to do that, and that is what this overenthusiasm, both in the Civil Aeronautics Authority and as it has been displayed on the floor of the Senate, will do and is doing, and it should not continue.

Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Appropriations. I have taken this matter up because after reading the annual report of the Civil Aeronautics Authority, and studying it, I am fully convinced that the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations will not in any way lessen the safety of travel by air or impair the necessary operation of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. If I thought they would, I would take a different position. I have not yet found any Senator who has taken the trouble I have taken to get the first report of the organization in which the Senator from Nevada takes so much pride, and has analyzed it and studied it, and has come to the conclusion which I have stated.

Mr. CLARK of Idaho. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator, if I may, to the fact that I have had this report ever since it was published, but my maps are a little more complete than the Senator's maps, because I have drawn many lines on them. If the Senator will look at the shaded lines on the first map and the dotted lines on the second map, he will find that they represent air lines and airways in connection with which $7,000,000 was appropriated last year for the construction of various safety devices which are now established or will be established by next July 1.

I have read the report through, not only once, but I suppose perhaps four or five times intermittently, and I should be very much interested in knowing how the Senator can read the report and then conclude that men will not be necessary to take care of these devices, this electrical equipment, the lighting equipment; how they can be hired unless money is appropriated to hire them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I may have an advantage or perhaps be at a disadvantage as compared with the Senator from Idaho. I have been at the head of Government bureaus, and I have always found that I could operate them cheaper and with less expenditure than many persons thought was possible. I think that is also true of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. I want to give the Senator from Idaho a direct answer. Eliminating the details which the Senator mentioned, I still say that it is my very best judgment that the Civil Aeronautics Authority can administer this work with perfect safety in the next fiscal year under the appropriation given by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, a great deal of this debate has centered about a comparative discussion between the appropriation for the current year and the appropriation for the next fiscal year. Some Senators have suggested that the appropriations contained in the pending measure, because they represent an increase over the appropriation for the current year, will be adequate and sufficient for all purposes for which the Civil Aeronautics Authority has been created.

Mr. President, I register no complaint, nor do I find fault with the Appropriations Committee, nor with those who take issue with the Appropriations Committee. However, I desire to point out something which has not been emphasized to my satisfaction, insofar as this particular debate is concerned. My distinguished colleague from Kansas [Mr. REED], indicating a desire for economy that is insatiable in the breast of every Senator, makes the point that not $1 of the taxpayers' money should be used for the purposes of this particular appropriation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. That is the end to which we work. I did not intend to be understood as saying that we could cut it off all at once. I think that would be impossible. But I do think that we ought to begin to economize.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the Senator for that observation. I knew that he would not go so far as to impoverish the Authority. But I was merely making the point that insofar as this particular item is concerned we have been led to believe that we are opening up the Treasury in order to subsidize our commercial air lines.

This particular item pertains to and applies to the air lines of the United States. The "airways" is another way of explaining what this item refers to. The airways are the common property of the people of America. They are in the sole care of the Government of the United States; they are used by the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard; they are used by our commercial lines; and they are also used by every private pilot in the United States. The air lines and the facilities necessary in order that those air lines might be up to date, the care of the air lines, the installation of the air lines, the common property of the people of America, are the root of this particular appropriation. That is the big point that I wish to contribute to this debate.

Another point I wish to make is that we are forgetting—in fact, I hardly believe we can comprehend—the phenomenal, if not the sensational, growth and development of the aviation industry in America. It is more stupendous than was the growth and development of the automobile industry in America. If one reflects and makes a comparative study of the building of the airways and the building of the highways, one will find that we are not appropriating much as compared with which the rise in the automobile industry made it necessary and essential for us to appropriate. We could not keep up with the necessary highway construction. We poured hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars into such projects. We are discussing the appropriation of only $1,000,000 to keep the air lines open and safe for every air mail, commercial, and military purpose that is approved by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Mr. President, I make this prediction: In the year 1940 the greatest expansion of the aviation industry will take place. We will not have nearly enough facilities to cope with the development of the industry.

So I ask Senators to consider, first of all, the reason for which this appropriation is meant. It is necessary to consider the marvelous, the phenomenal growth of the industry that is to take place, and that will require more facilities of this character than have been provided in the past.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. REED. I may ask the distinguished junior Senator from New York whether he agrees with my premise that when we use the taxpayers' money to create a highway upon which there is travel for commercial use, for profit, that that travel ought to pay a toll commensurate with the amount of money that we have taken from the taxpayers who create the highway? Does the Senator from New York agree with that?

Mr. MEAD. The day of the toll road and the toll bridge is over.

Mr. REED. But not the toll highway. The United States Government is paying half of the expense of the trip that I myself made to Kansas City within the last week.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in order that I might answer that question more fully than would be the answer if I said yes or no, let us look into the situation. Let us analyze the financial reports, the air-mail reports, that are available up to date. And let me say to the Senator from Kansas that every major air line in the United States, every large continental line, and every major line other than a transcontinental line, is earning money, is paying its own way, and in some instances is yielding a profit to the Post Office Department for carrying the mail. The reports sustain that contention.

Let me say further to the Senator—and I have what I assume to be fairly authentic authority—that the lines are paying in other ways. Not only are they in some instances paying a profit to the Government for the expeditious carrying of the mail, but they are beginning to earn their own way. They are coming out of the red. And they are meeting a very substantial tax payment levied against them by the State and the Federal Governments.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator from New York certainly does not mean that in earnest, because—

Mr. MEAD. The Senator means just that.

Mr. REED. The reports show that out of 37 air companies 35 of them were in the black in the last fiscal year, and 2 of them are still in the red, but in order to achieve that result they had to have all these services furnished to them which we are furnishing through the appropriations and through relief funds. I know the Senator from New York desires to be accurate. The statement I have made is true. The only way they can carry on is through Government subsidies.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MEAD. If I may first answer the Senator from Kansas, I shall be glad to yield later to the Senator from New Mexico.

Of course, the Senator realizes that if what he says is accurate, and we should remove all these facilities because they are a charge against the Treasury, then every one of the facilities, with few exceptions, will have to be replaced for the purposes of the Army and Navy and for the purposes of others who use the air and who are not listed as commercial air lines.

The point I wish to make is that the air lanes belong to the people of America. Neither the Senator nor I have any right to charge them as an expense to the Army, to the Navy, to the thousands of private fliers, or to the commercial air lines. They are utilized by all, and they are the common property of all, and they should ever remain within our power and authority.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

Mr. CHAVEZ. I should like to have the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] straighten out one particular matter. He seems to be of the opinion that the airway companies are receiving the service for nothing. It is true that the Government has spent some money building airports throughout the country—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, let me correct the Senator from New Mexico. I stated awhile ago that the air lines did pay some fees. It is so stated in the report. They are given in too much detail to undertake to put them into the RECORD, but any Senator may inform himself by reading the report of the Civil Aeronautics Authority in that connection.

Mr. CHAVEZ. That is correct; but I wish to inform the Senator from Kansas of one particular fact in reference to expenses of airway companies. Some time ago he mentioned the fact that the W. P. A. or some Government agency had spent some money building airports. That is correct. One such airport was built in my home city of Albuquerque. It is a wonderful plant, as fine an airport as there is in the entire United States; and while it is true that the W. P. A. spent some money, the city of Albuquerque spent some money, and I know that that money was paid in lease rentals by the airway companies. They were the ones who advanced the money, paying their lease money in advance in order to enable the city of Albuquerque to put up the amount necessary to carry out the work of the W. P. A.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President—

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield in just a moment.

There are hundreds of cities in the United States which, at great sacrifice to themselves and to their own taxpayers, have constructed modern airports. Those airports in many instances are not used by the commercial air lines referred to by the Senator from Kansas. Of course, that service would be welcomed, but the point I wish to make is that those airports have been constructed and are being used as schools of instruction for training units or for the manufacturing activities of the area or for the private flyers who reside in the community. Therefore it is impossible to say that the United States Government has at great expense subsidized the commercial air lines, because the commercial phase is but one phase of the entire aviation activity of America. The Old World countries have spent fabulous sums of money in setting up the system which we are discussing and in building airports, and it was all charged to the military. However, in America we emphasize commercial aviation, and as a result we have the finest system in all the world. It has not been built for the military defense of the country, but, as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] well pointed out, it will be capable of coming to our defense in no uncertain terms; and the $1,000,000 contained in this appropriation—a drop in the bucket compared to the building of one battleship—will, in my judgment, be a better contribution to national defense than the building of a battleship.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. REED. For the information of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], I should like to read from a statement sent to me this morning by the Civil Aeronautics Authority:

Landing fees or rentals to scheduled air-line operators seem to vary from nothing to several hundred dollars per month. The mean average of all landing fees appears to be about fifty or sixty dollars per month. This figure cannot be taken as a definite criterion, due to the extreme variation in charges. The 1938 questionnaires available indicate that over $350,000 has been paid to airports (all airports) in forms of landing fees.

In addition to landing fees, charges are made for office rentals in hangars and administration buildings. Again, these charges range from nothing to thousands of dollars per year, depending upon the amount of space occupied and the type of accommodation furnished.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for just a moment?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. If that statement is correct, I know one airway company which has been badly treated.

Mr. REED. I am giving the Senator from New Mexico the answer to the question he raised.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I believe I have dealt with the subject of air lanes, their use and their control, sufficiently to impress Senators with the fact that we cannot charge to the commercial air lines all the costs of construction of airports, air lanes, and facilities such as are included in this item in the appropriation bill. The air lanes of America will forever remain in the control of the United States Government; and who knows but that all the equipment will be taken over in the event of war? Therefore, they will always remain under the jurisdiction of a Federal agency.

Mr. President, I stated a moment ago that we were forgetting another point, and that is the phenomenal growth of aviation. We cannot visualize it. It is making a tremendous contribution to the Nation's economy. It is not only returning a profit to the Post Office Department, insofar as the older lines are concerned, but it is returning a profit if we consider it in its probable economic aspect.

I have before me press reports gathered from a few newspapers for one day. These reports bear on the point I am making in connection with the phenomenal growth of aviation.

The first is from the New York Herald Tribune. It says:

New safety record made by United States air lines in 1939—82,000,000 passenger-miles flown for each fatality—contrasts with 22,308,771 passenger-miles per passenger-fatality in 1938 and 21,080,515 in 1933, the best previous years; approximately 5,000,000 passengers were carried on scheduled and nonscheduled flights in 1939 and more than 6,000 private pilots were issued licenses during the year.

That splendid record should stimulate a desire on our part further to enhance the safety of travel by air by being very considerate and very careful about matters of this kind.

I have a clipping from the Wall Street Journal, which says:

AIR LINES HAD FIRST PROFITABLE YEAR IN HISTORY IN 1939

(By Gaston E. Marquie)

Acceleration of good trend indicated for coming year, more equipment ordered, likely to seek new capital, gives comparative table showing revenue passenger-miles of railroads and air lines.

This is somewhat of an answer to the statement made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

I have a clipping from the New York Times, which says:

ENOUGH AIRCRAFT ORDERS ON HAND TO KEEP SOME FIRMS BUSY INTO 1941

(By T. C. Sullivan)

Total backlog, about $680,000,000 against $175,000,000 at beginning of 1939; war is large factor in outlook; plant expansion programs completed or undertaken during 1939 will provide the industry with factory space 30 to 40 percent greater than a year ago.

That is a stupendous rise.

I have the following from the Washington (D. C.) Star:

DOUGLAS REPORTS RECORD ORDERS FOR AIR LINES IN LAST 6 MONTHS

Since June 1, 1939, orders for 82 air liners, valued at approximately $10,000,000, have been placed by air-line operators with Douglas, the majority of which are for the popular 21-passenger DC-3 transport and sleeper planes; will begin construction at once on 40 giant DC-4 planes.

From the New York Wall Street Journal:

American aircraft industry bids for world leadership. Sees opportunity in current rush of orders to make permanent gains; avoids excess plant building; anticipates greater private-plane market due to pilot-training program and confidence of public because of recent safety records; this in turn will result in the establishment of the necessary airports.

From the New York Times of December 31, 1939:

UNITED STATES DIESELS FOR PLANES

(By Paul H. Wilkinson)

Two years ago it might have been said that the United States was in fourth place with regard to the development of the Diesel aircraft engine; now the picture has changed, and we have moved up to second place, partly due to our own efforts and partly due to the neglect of France and England in developing simplified aircraft Diesels along accepted lines.

From the Washington Post of January 4:

Noncollege students in the civilian pilot training program will be enrolled for ground-school work from noon until 9 p. m. today at Columbus, 1750 N Street NW.; ground school will open Thursday, January 11; details not yet settled.

We must also take into consideration that in addition to the activities of the Civil Aeronautics Authority in the current year, the Authority is called upon to train at least 10,000 pilots during the coming year. That, of course, will be an added item of expense.

I have the following further clippings:

From the Los Angeles Times of December 24, 1939:

PLANE DEVICES UNDER TEST

Lewis L. Imm, former Bureau of Air Commerce inspector, experimenting with new devices at his Burbank factory. New devices consist of a "design computer," which will enable engineers to obtain maximum aeronautical efficiency out of planes in the making, and an "air mass computer," which will assist weather forecasters in correlating meteorological reports from all parts of the United States.

From the Washington Post of January 4:

VINSON ASKS 3,000 PLANES, 95 SHIPS, TO COST $1,300,000,000

(By John G. Norris)

Naval Committee to consider measure Monday; Representative SNYDER, chairman of House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, urged that Army plane strength be enlarged from present goal of 5,500 to 8,000; minority member of House Naval Committee Representative MAAS favored 10,000 planes for Army and 6,000 for Navy, and a large reserve of pilots.

From the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of January 4:

CIVIL AERONAUTICS AUTHORITY GROUND-SCHOOL ENROLLMENT WILL OPEN TODAY AT COLUMBUS UNIVERSITY

Noncollege students in the civilian-pilot-training program will be enrolled for ground-school work from noon until 9 p. m. today at Columbus, 1750 N Street NW.; ground school will open Thursday, January 11; details not yet settled.

From the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of January 4:

SUPERSPEED SHIP AWAITS ARMY TEST

Army will soon test new bomber which flies so fast it needs no escort; being manufactured by Vultee Aircraft Division of Aviation Manufacturing Corporation of Downey, Calif.

From the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of January 4:

PAN AMERICAN ASKS DAILY TRANSATLANTIC CLIPPER SERVICE

Application filed with Civil Aeronautics Authority; new schedule would start in March; line has new $5,000,000 fleet of super clippers under construction at Boeing Aircraft Co. plant in Seattle; officials emphasized that the new schedule would eliminate necessity for the line to request continuation of Government subsidies.

The following is from an editorial in the Oakland (Calif.) Tribune of December 21, 1939:

THE DEFENSE BILL

Accepting the evidence of the Gallup poll, 88 percent of the people are in favor of an immediate strengthening of the Army, 88 percent for strengthening of the Navy, and 91 percent for augmenting the air force; unquestionably the subject of national defense will be a main one before the present Congress.

Mr. President, in order to give the Senate some percentages in connection with this remarkable growth, let me very hurriedly call off these figures:

Revenue miles flown, taking 1937 as 100 percent, have increased in 1939 to 124 percent.

Total passengers carried, 100 percent in 1934; 173 percent in 1939.

Passenger-miles flown per passenger-fatality increased from 100 percent to 699 percent.

Value of aircraft put into service has increased 91 percent.

The number of employees, using 1937 as 100 percent, has increased to 133 percent in 1939.

This is one of the few industries of America which is employing more men each successive year even though the machine equipment is constantly improving. This is an industry that is really paying dividends to the Nation's economy.

Let me give a few additional percentages that reveal the stupendous improvement in this industry.

Passengers carried for the year ending June 30, 1935, one-half million. Passengers carried for the year ending June 30, 1939, one and a half million, representing an increase of 200 percent.

Pounds of mail—and this is the reason why, at least the older lines, are paying a profit to the Postal Service—pounds of mail carried in the year ending June 30, 1935, ten and a half million; pounds of mail carried in the year ending June 30, 1939, twenty-four and a half million, representing an increase of 130 percent.

Pounds of express carried, year ending June 30, 1935, two and a half million; year ending June 30, 1939, eight and a half million, representing an increase of 230 percent.

Pounds of excess baggage, year ending June 30, 1935, 900,000; year ending June 30, 1939, 2,000,000, an increase of 106 percent.

Revenues of air carriers 1935, $23,000,000; 1939, $47,000,000, an increase of 106 percent; expenses of air carriers 1935, $26,000,000, which represented a loss of $3,000,000; 1939, $46,000,000, representing a profit of $1,000,000.

Air-mail postage receipts, 1935, six and a half million dollars; 1939, sixteen and a quarter million dollars, representing an increase of 150 percent.

The increases were constant during the 5-year period, but were generally greater during the last fiscal year.

Mr. President, to indicate that the facilities covered by this bill are not for the exclusive purposes of commercial aviation, let me read a paragraph to the Senate:

The present teletype and associated interphone communication facilities of the Civil Aeronautics Authority directly serve 49 military airdromes located at various points throughout the United States.

Not only do they help in a military way but their contribution to agriculture is worthy of note. During the past year the United States Weather Bureau, by utilizing Civil Aeronautics Authority teletype service, have been able to extend and increase service to the general public including the farmers in a manner comparable to the services furnished the aviation industry.

At approximately 14 smaller towns the United States Weather Bureau has consolidated its city offices with its aerological airport offices, so that the Civil Aeronautics Authority teletype circuits may be available to the general public, and this has resulted in an increase to the general public of service from a 12-hour basis to a 24-hour.

With the extended service being furnished on the Civil Aeronautics Authority teletype network over 50 of the larger city Weather Bureau offices have been furnished extensions of the teletype circuit. These extensions have permitted the city offices in the larger communities to give increased service and better forecasting, which information is transmitted to the general public and the farmers in the communities around these larger centers.

This information consists of a bare statement of facts, and the Weather Bureau feels that it can be amplified threefold without distorting the facts.

So agriculture is furnished the same service as that which is supplied to aviation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in my remarks certain additional statistics in reference to this subject.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, in conclusion I desire to summarize by saying that we are discussing the air lanes as contrasted with the commercial air lines. We are discussing the air lanes that belong to the United States, and the facilities that make up the air lanes that are used by military, by commercial, and by private air lines and airships. We are discussing, Mr. President, an industry that cannot be fairly compared with any other industry for which any provision is made in any other appropriation bill. If an appropriation designed to aid a given industry were in a certain amount, and if we took that as a basis for an argument for or against appropriations for the airplane industry, we would miss the point of the phenomenal growth of this industry in America. So I ask Senators to give consideration to the growth of the industry and to the fact that the air lanes are the property of the Government and are used not only by the air lines but by every form of every aviation activity.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I have been following the debate very carefully, and now, on behalf of those Members of the Senate who are overzealous, perhaps, in their enthusiasm for airways, I desire to say a few words with reference to the airways so ably described by the Senator from New York.

I believe that when there is developed a new industry, which has to do beneficially with the best interests of the country, it is false economy to cut down any appropriation that may aid in carrying it forward and in promoting its welfare.

I believe that possibly I have flown in airplanes about as much as has any other Member of this body, and I, for one, irrespective of other considerations, and with due deference to whatever action Congress may have heretofore taken in behalf of airways in this country, feel like paying a tribute to the hardy Americans who have made air navigation what it is today throughout the entire world.

Possibly we may not feel they have done very much, but I have reason to know some of the facts connected with the development of the airplane industry and with the airways in the United States.

As ably stated by the Senator from New York, there is not a single industry in the country that has made the progress or that has put more people to work during the days of the depression or recession, whatever one may want to call it, than has the airplane industry. It would do the heart of any Member of this body good to take a little time off and visit the airplane plant in Baltimore or one in southern California, whether it be at San Diego or at Los Angeles, or perhaps the one at Seattle, and there see young Americans by the thousands employed in a new industry, and lessening to that extent any demands by way of relief upon the Federal Government.

It was my good fortune during the latter part of November and the early part of December last year, in company with the Senator from Indiana, who is now presiding with such ability and dignity [Mr. MINTON in the chair], with the Senator on my left from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], to fly over many parts of the United States and to obtain first-hand information as to the possibilities of the development of this industry which is growing so rapidly and which means so much not only to the economic life of the United States but in times of emergency to the defense of the Nation.

I, for one, confess that I am overenthusiastic about airplanes and airways. While I feel that we should cut the expenses of government, I still think that it is false economy to reduce appropriations which affect those things that are absolutely necessary in this time and age. I may also add that I am so "sold" on the work performed by young Americans who have made the world air-minded and who have actually carried to other climes the so-called good-will policy of the Federal Government that I want to pay them tribute. I will state to this body that the Pan American Airways have brought about more good will in South America in a few short years than have a hundred years of discussion by so-called diplomats, and the Pan American Airways are still carrying forward that good work. Let us not try to hamper aviation; let us not try to hamper the airplane industry by cutting down in a direction that may mean—and I have good reason personally to know whereof I speak—the crippling of the industry.

The Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Nevada have referred to the death in an airplane accident of my predecessor, the late Senator Cutting. I wish to goodness there had been available at that time the weather information and the inspection which has since been made possible, so that he could be in this body instead of me. I still feel that it was the lack of weather information, and possibly of inspection, which caused his death. So why not try to save human life, whether it be the life of a United States Senator or of an ordinary American citizen? What would be accomplished by hampering the industry, which would be the result if the appropriation were reduced a million dollars? Would that be saving the Government? Would that balance the Budget? All it would do would be to retard the progress of a great industry.

I thank the Senate.

CENSUS QUESTIONNAIRES

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I shall not speak on the pending amendment to the bill before us; but I shall speak in answer to Hon. Harry Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce of the United States, replying to a letter which he wrote me and which was received last night, in reply to one of mine sent to him a few days ago, which I read on the floor of the Senate on February 1.

On February 1 I read to this body a letter, dated January 31, which I had written to Secretary Hopkins, of the Department of Commerce; and this letter appears on page 887 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 1.

In my letter to Mr. Hopkins I said that in the light of evidence found by the Sheppard investigating committee in the W. P. A. scandal, where official, confidential information was divulged by W. P. A. officials to Democratic political bosses, I felt that there was real danger to our individual citizens in forcing them, under the population census, under threat of a penalty of imprisonment, to divulge to the politically appointed census enumerators information concerning the individual citizen's income and indebtedness; and I urged that questions concerning a man's or a woman's private income be eliminated from the questionnaire.

Mr. Hopkins has written me a letter dated February 3, 1940, which purports to be a reply to the points which I raised, but which in reality is nothing but a confession and avoidance, and a clear disposition to retain these questions concerning income of the individual citizen.

I now read this letter to you:

MY DEAR SENATOR TOBEY: This is in reply to your letter of January 31 in which you characterize certain questions to be asked in the approaching census as departures from precedent and invasions of the privacy of the individual.

Surely you know that the census is 150 years old this year—one of the oldest activities of the Federal Government—that it was provided for in the United States Constitution; and that it has been taken every 10 years since 1790. Surely you know that, almost throughout this Nation's entire life, the census has provided the basic facts for democratic guidance not only of individuals and public officials at all levels, but also of agriculture and industry. The census has survived and grown stronger through all sorts of political administrations, because it is so designed, and has been so continued, as to command the continued respect and confidence of a free people. Any sincere public official should regret seeing this long and splendid record damaged for purely partisan, political reasons, and that is why I am replying to you at such length.

To the foregoing I now reply:

Yes; we all know that the census is 150 years old this year, and I know that never before in the 150 years' history of the census has any question ever been asked of the individual by politically appointed enumerators as to how much income a man made.

We also know that the census was provided for in the Constitution of the United States. That is nothing new; but I go farther than merely stating the fact that the census is provided for in the United States Constitution. Article 1, section 2, of the Constitution says:

The actual enumeration shall be made within 3 years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

That is, in such manner as the Congress directs—not Harry Hopkins, bureaucrat.

The Bureau of the Census receives its authority to take the present decennial census from the National Census Act of June 18, 1929. This act stipulates that the census—shall be restricted to inquiries relating to population, to agriculture, to irrigation, drainage, distribution, employment, and mines.

Nowhere in this act is authority granted for questions regarding a man's personal income.

Yes; the census is provided for in the United States Constitution, but the Constitution restricts it to be carried out in such manner as the Congress by law shall direct, and not otherwise.

I now resume reading from Mr. Hopkins' letter:

Your entire discussion of the census is based upon misconception of it. First: You write as if census questions concerning home mortgages were new this year. The truth is that 50 years ago, in 1890, such questions were first included in the census during the Republican administration of President Benjamin Harrison and these questions were specifically ordered by Congress. I quote the exact language of the law: "That it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of the Census, in addition to the duties now required of him by law, to ascertain the number of persons who live on and cultivate their own farms and who live in their own homes and the number who hire their homes and farms and the number of farms and homes which are under mortgage, the amount of mortgage debt, and the value of the property mortgaged. He shall also ascertain whether such farms and homes have been mortgaged for the whole or part of the purchase money for the same or for other purposes and the rates of interest paid upon the mortgage loans."

Questions concerning this same subject—value of nonfarm homes, mortgage debt and rate of interest—again were included in the census of 1920.

Indeed, this whole furore about personal questions in 1940 is absurd. I can well imagine how much more vivid your complaint would be if it were proposed that in 1940, each person be asked to state the value of all the real estate he owns and the value of all other property he owns. We are not asking these questions, but the first of them was asked by the Whigs in the census of 1850, under President Zachary Taylor.

Both of them were asked in 1860 and 1870 under the Democratic President Buchanan and the Republican President Grant.

As to asking people who rent their homes the amount of rent they pay, that question was first placed in the census list in 1930 under President Hoover.

Yes; questions concerning home mortgages were asked back in 1890, but Mr. Hopkins apparently did not understand my objection. My objection is based upon the fact that never before in the history of this country has the Nation witnessed the shameful betrayal of trust by politically appointed Government workers carried on on a national scale under the W. P. A. scandal. In the light of this picture, where secret official files were turned over to party bosses to be used to coerce voters to vote against their convictions and to throw off the relief rolls those who insisted upon maintaining their principles in voting, the people are reasonably justified in being apprehensive about being forced, under penalty of imprisonment, to inform their politically appointed neighbors whether their homes are mortgaged, and, if so, how much the secured indebtedness is and whether payments are being made from time to time on it.

I could read for hours on the Senate floor of facts found by the Sheppard investigating committee and others that have come to my attention at first hand, in my own State of New Hampshire, of instances in which coercion was used on W. P. A. workers.

I resume reading from Mr. Hopkins' letter:

Second. You express alarm over the fact that the answer of census questions is compulsory. The truth is that the laws have contained penalties for refusals to answer these questions ever since the first census in 1790 and that no one has complained seriously, and no one has been penalized, because the American people on the whole recognize the basic value of this work.

Third. You create an impression that the 1940 census is something new and strange which shatters precedent and somehow carries a threat of dictatorship. The truth is that the law under which the 1940 census will be taken, with the single exception of the housing schedule, is the Fifteenth Census Act, sponsored and recommended to Congress by Herbert Hoover while he was Secretary of Commerce, and enacted while he was President. Except for the supplementary census of housing, no new decennial census legislation has been enacted since Mr. Hoover left the White House. On this point let me quote Representative E. Hart Fenn, chairman of the House Census Committee, as he opened the hearings on the Fifteenth Census Act on January 11, 1928:

"Before I came to Washington I communicated with the Secretary of Commerce and the Census Bureau * * * and this bill was referred to me by Mr. Hoover. * * * It is what I may characterize as the bill which the Department of Commerce and the Bureau of the Census consider advisable to be adopted for the taking of the Fifteenth Decennial Census."

Much of what I have just read is a repetition of the first part of the letter. That this is the Fifteenth Census Act is not disputed, and never has been. This fact places the more emphasis upon the departure of the Census Bureau by its inclusion of questions Nos. 32 and 33, which demand that the individual citizen reveal to his politically appointed neighbor how much income he has earned for the past year. Mr. Hopkins' reference to the 1929 authorization act avoids mention of the fact that this act places definite restrictions upon the Census Bureau, which restrictions have been ignored by the Census Bureau by the insertion of the income questions. Never before has it been compulsory for a person to reveal such information in such a manner, and there is no law requiring a citizen to do it now; merely the dictum of Harry Hopkins.

Further, Mr. Hopkins writes:

Fourth. The method of selecting enumerators, which is in force today, is such an old and traditional method, having been concurred in by both political parties for longer than the memory of any living man, that it needs no comment from me.

Well, we will answer Mr. Hopkins on that point.

"Old and traditional method," Mr. Hopkins? In this spoils system of selecting these 130,000 census enumerators without regard to merit, but solely on political patronage basis, you excuse the administration's continuing this practice on the ground that it is an old and traditional method. Have you forgotten, and has the administration forgotten, that back in 1932 its campaign criers covered the country from Alaska to Florida, from Maine to California, and promised the people a new deal? And yet, once seizing power, you hold to the old and traditional method of discriminating against the people and forget that promise of a new deal. The people cannot forget.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I certainly will yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Do I correctly understand the Senator from New Hampshire that his complaint upon this particular ground is that the Democrats are doing just what the Republicans did?

Mr. TOBEY. Oh, no. If the Senator will retain his seat a few minutes longer, I will tell him what I am driving at.

When the New Deal first came into power many of the deluded of this country thought the administration would be the tree of liberty. That tree has accomplished many strange things. The most wonderful thing about it is the amount of grafting it has been able to survive.

Has Mr. Hopkins forgotten, or is he ignoring, the position taken by prominent Members of this body when he holds to the old order, and refuses to select these enumerators on the basis of merit rather than to pay a political debt?

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], speaking on the Senate floor, unequivocally assured the people where he stands on this issue when he said:

In my judgment, it is a great step backward to undertake the important work of obtaining a correct census of the people and of the activities of the citizens of the United States without having the very best possible employees selected. * * * In the instances where the census was taken by civil-service appointees, the results have been, in the main, satisfactory; when the census was taken under a system other than that of appointments by merit, there has been a certain amount of maladministration and, in some instances, grave inaccuracies, if not absolute frauds. This important governmental undertaking should be removed from every scintilla of corruption, extravagance, inaccuracy, and abuse that it is possible to eliminate. * * * Every experience of the past prompts us, if we want an honest and reliable count and prevent the wastefulness resulting from incompetent officials, to appoint census takers under civil service. * * * I want to protest vigorously and emphatically against the census being taken merely upon the basis of political favor, partisan patronage, and party reward.

Well said, Senator WALSH!

Mr. Hugo Black—surely Senators have not forgotten him—once a Member of this body, and now a Justice on our Supreme Court, and a most prominent member of the Democratic Party, in a speech on this floor, gave this expression of his sentiments to the people. I quote his words:

Who fills the ranks of this (census) army? Who appoints the supervisors? The Director of the Census, through political channels. Who appoints the supervisors' clerks? The Director of the Census through political channels. Who appoints the interpreters and public agents? The Director of the Census through political channels. And who is this almighty and all-powerful Director of the Census? He is the political appointee of the President.

Step back and look at this creation in its true perspective. You have evolved an instrumentality of patronage and politics of gigantic proportions. And you have placed a controlling lever in the hands of the President without imposing upon him any responsibility. * * * Is there no method superior to the spoils system? Have we never heard of the merit system? It has been developed and improved and perfected during the last half century. Is it really necessary that we resort to the refuse heap of discredited and discarded government devices, where the spoils system lingers in its rotten state, and drag it out into the main hall of government?

Those were the sentiments of former Senator Black, uttered on this floor.

And the able senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] who has my great admiration, made known his views in the following language:

It is said that time is short; that the Civil Service Commission cannot make the appointments in the length of time available. The time will be just as long for the Civil Service Commission to do it as for the politicians to do it. God is not going to keep the sun from going down in order to give the politicians more time, and shove it behind the clouds if the Civil Service Commission shall do it. The time is going to be just the same, short I admit, too short to do a really efficient job perhaps, but the Civil Service Commission is equipped to make appointments without regard for politics, but the political machine is equipped to make appointments with nothing else in view except politics. We must take one horn of the dilemma or the other. * * * If a man can convince the boss that he is able to get the most votes, that he is the best politician in his community, he is going to get the job. * * *

I continue reading Mr. Hopkins' letter:

I make these political references with the utmost reluctance and only because your letter forces me to do so. The census, an established and valued American institution, should not be made the butt of partisan political sniping. Its questions are its own. They are the questions to which large and responsible groups of American citizens are demanding the answer.

Now, where do the questions come from? The Census Bureau calls together at conference after conference representatives of business, industry, and labor, and all other large groups primarily interested. They sift down a multitude of questions, always seeking to reduce the number to a few of the most basic and broadly significant. Literally thousands of questions have been reviewed during the past year—many of them useful questions—so as not to burden the people.

Then, these questions are further sifted by the Central Statistical Board of the Bureau of the Budget, and finally by the Census Advisory Committee, a group of widely known experts from outside Government circles. This committee includes Robert D. Chaddock, of Columbia University; Dr. J. Frederick Dewhurst, of Twentieth Century Fund; Paul T. Cherrington, market analyst; Dr. William F. Ogburn, of the University of Chicago; Dr. William L. Thorpe, of Dun & Bradstreet and economic adviser to the Secretary of Commerce; and Dr. Murray R. Benedict, of the University of California.

Thus these questions will be, as far as the Census Bureau can ascertain by vast labor and pains, the wishes of the American people.

In fact, the questions on the population schedule were tried out with nearly 2,000 persons in the Indiana test census, and the questions on earnings were answered with very little hesitancy. What hesitancy was displayed came chiefly from the higher-income groups, whose objections vanished when they learned that all they needed to state was "over $5,000."

I point out that that is misleading. There is no provision in the law for this question on the blank regarding a limitation about $5,000. The question is: "What is the amount of money wages or salary received (including commissions)." Did this person receive income of $50 or more from sources other than money wages or salary? And you have to answer those questions as they are put.

Mr. Hopkins contends that the questions in these census schedules represent the wishes of the American people. Not according to my files; not according to the letters and telephone calls I am receiving from hundreds of justly apprehensive men and women who are concerned to learn that they will be forced, under threat of imprisonment, to divulge their incomes to politically appointed neighbors, who are concerned in the light of the activities of betrayal of confidence during the recent W. P. A. scandal. As a single illustration, I read from a letter which I received just the other day from a woman in New York State:

On a recent news broadcast I heard an item which told of your interest in and opposition to questions in the census. This comes to me with much force because of experiences I have had. One was during a recent farm census, when I was obliged to tell a neighbor, who had been made census taker, if I had a mortgage and how much. This is a small town, and this information was a sweet morsel for the census taker, who lost no time in letting it be known. For such as I am, whose honest endeavor is to live a square and decent life and mind my own business, these things hurt cruelly and seem most unjust. I hope you will continue to push this matter; and if the above will be of use to you in so doing, use it, but kindly do not mention my name, as I very much dislike publicity, and my health demands I keep as quiet as possible.

No; these questions regarding income do not represent the wishes of the American people.

Mr. Hopkins continues in his letter as follows:

If, however, there should be objectors among those of lower incomes, it must be said that the law prescribes severe penalties—$1,000 fine or 2 years in prison, or both—for any census taker who reveals any of this personal information. Throughout the long history of the Bureau there have been very few cases of it.

I do not feel that this penalty provision will prove any more of an impediment to the divulging of his neighbor's income by a politically appointed census enumerator than was the penalty provision contained in the Work Relief and Public Works Appropriation Act of 1938, which imposed the following restrictions and penalties on W. P. A. political appointees:

Any person who knowingly and with intent to defraud the United States makes any false statement in connection with any application for any project, employment, or relief aid under the appropriations in this title, or diverts, or attempts to divert, or assists in diverting, for the benefit of any person or persons not entitled thereto, any portion of such appropriation or any services or personal property acquired thereunder, or who knowingly, by means of any fraud, force, threat, intimidation, or boycott, or discrimination, on account of race, religion, political affiliations, or membership in the labor organization, deprives any person of any of the benefits to which he may be entitled under any such appropriation, or attempts to so do, or assists in so doing, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

That this penalty of a fine of $2,000 or imprisonment up to a year was no effective impediment to betrayal of confidences by W. P. A. officials is well established in the record of the report of the Sheppard investigating committee. Throughout the Nation confidential files were secretly handed over to political bosses, and political bosses used the information to deny relief to those who refused to vote against their convictions and support particular candidates at the polls. The record is filled with instances of coercion and betrayal of confidence, even in the face of such a penalty provision contained in the statute.

What assurance, then, is the penalty provision in the Census Act, that the private information of the individual will not be divulged to a man's neighbor-politician?

I continue reading Mr. Hopkins' letter:

Your views on the housing census apparently have been formed without knowledge of the census and are out of step with the wishes of the American people. Literally, thousands of large business and industrial interests and associations, along with groups of many other types, want the picture of American housing. The builder cannot take the risk of large operations without knowledge of the census. This is a situation which has been known for years to any person who cared to read about current affairs. The files of the Census Bureau are full of requests for this information. Your fears about the invasion of people's privacy and about the widespread misuse of this confidential information by the census taker will hold up only as long as you labor under the delusion that this activity is something new. This, of course, is completely false. There is almost unlimited experience to prove that the American people are willing to cooperate in providing the facts sought by the census and to prove further that census enumerators, with very rare exceptions, respect the confidence entrusted to them. The census is not essentially different from decade to decade. A few new questions are added each time, out of the experience of the immediate past, but the same general method applied to your parents and your grandparents, now applies to you. Yet, can you recall any important outcry concerning misuse of census information in your entire lifetime?

Can I recall any important outcries concerning misuse of census information in my entire lifetime? Yes; I can. Many of them, and here they are, Mr. Hopkins.

I have already read the letter I received from a woman in New York, whose trust was betrayed by a census enumerator. My other authorities are great and numerous, and they come from important sources.

The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] could answer Mr. Hopkins better than I could, and I will use his words:

Will you forget what happened in prior censuses—how, in 1910, corruption and fraud and graft were revealed upon the part of many of the enumerators in this country? * * * There was much fraud and corruption in 1910, but the reports do state that they were not so glaring and so frequent as in 1900.

I further answer Mr. Hopkins in the following words of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]:

We are face to face with the issue whether or not we are going to repeat the frauds and scandals which have occurred in the taking of previous censuses by selecting census employees, nearly 100,000 of them, on the basis of political favor.

I further answer Mr. Hopkins by using the words of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]:

The Senator referred to the Maryland case, and I take it the Senator recalls that the enumerators appointed who were guilty of the fraud to which the Senator referred were appointed as a result of the spoils system—that is, merely upon the recommendation of political leaders, without any reference to the civil-service law.

I now answer Mr. Hopkins in the words of the Federal grand jury which investigated the Maryland fraud cases. After disclosing the frauds, the grand jury said:

So long as such appointments are treated as parts of the spoils of politics, the recurrence of such frauds and scandals as have been revealed in our investigations may be expected to continue.

The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has already answered Mr. Hopkins' question, and I quote his words:

Our experience in the past teaches us that where the census has been taken under the spoils system, there have always been great abuses. There will be great abuses in this instance. If, for instance, the Director of the Census may delegate to the supervisor authority to appoint enumerators, and if they are appointed entirely from the political standpoint, unquestionably there will be great abuses.

I continue reading Mr. Hopkins' letter:

The whole theory of democracy is based upon confidence in the individual and in his willingness to cooperate, in proper fields, for the common good. I have faith both in the people who are asking these questions and those who are answering them.

I answer, Yes, Mr. Hopkins; the people will be willing to cooperate in proper fields. You say you have faith in the people who are asking and answering these questions. Such optimism on the part of one who headed that great nationwide organization of W. P. A. in that period in our history where betrayal after betrayal of secret trust, and coercion after coercion was demonstrated by those who served under him, to the detriment of needy men and women who, through no fault of their own, were denied the sustenance of life merely because they refused to resign their convictions in favor of certain political candidates.

I now read the remainder of Mr. Hopkins' letter:

The one thing which might do serious harm, the one thing that might do serious violence to the 1940 census and thus to the national welfare, would be the wide circulation of false charges that it is something new and fearsome. I assure you that it represents no departure from precedent, either in the law under which it operates or the mechanics by which it is carried out. The 1940 census, as in the past, finds us taking the regular inventory of democracy in action.

Sincerely,

HARRY HOPKINS,
Secretary of Commerce.

That is a misleading and a false statement, as I have pointed out. He reads into that law questions that are not permitted by the law, and I throw the statement back at him.

Mr. President, the contention that the inquisition regarding the amount of income of the individual is not new is not true. This is admitted by the Bureau of the Census in its general information sheet which was sent to me by the Bureau of the Census yesterday. On page 2 thereof is the following:

It will, for the first time, seek information on the amount of wages or salaries for the past 12 months.

And please contrast this with Harry Hopkins' assertion that there is no change.

Mr. President, it not only represents a departure from precedent as admitted by the census information sheet but as denied by Mr. Hopkins, but it is clearly, as I have pointed out previously, a violation of the law under which it operates, which law places restrictions as to the scope of information to be secured by the Census Bureau. By going beyond the provision of the law in its inclusion of income questions, the Bureau of the Census sets itself up as a law-making body. This it has no right to do.

No less prominent a personage than Justice Hugo Black, formerly a Member of this body, has expressed his view of bureaucratic lawmaking in the following language:

Several bureaus that have the power of promulgating rules and regulations, for a violation of which a man can be sent to jail, and can be subjected to punishment as though he had violated a legally written statute of this Government, several bureaus which have the powers and privileges of lawmaking bodies * * *. Why is that? It is because Congress, from time to time, has let fall from its enfeebled grasp the power which the fathers of this Government intended should be lodged in the legislative powers and authorities. * * * We have a bureau that declares a rule, for instance, that he who permits a fly to be on his premises shall be put to death and their rule becomes a law. Bureau upon top of bureau, bureau on top of bureau, until they pile up, towering into the sky, each one emitting rules and rules and rules like the volcano belches forth its smoke, until the average citizen is lost in the meshes of the multitudinous laws, rules, and regulations more than he ever dreamed he could be.

Mr. President, several years ago when he was Administrator of the W. P. A., it was reported that Mr. Hopkins made the following statement:

The people are just too damn dumb to understand what is going on.

Mr. Hopkins, the people are not too dumb this time to understand what is going on. At least they will not be when the census enumerator calls at their houses and asks them how much income they have made during the past year. They will recognize an unjustified inquisition when they see it.

Mr. President, I am very much in earnest in this matter. I have received hundreds of letters and telephone calls from conscientious people of all classes, and I am interested particularly in the little man who may be intimidated and coerced by the appearance of the official census taker, who will ask questions about income which have not been authorized by the Congress.

I therefore ask unanimous consent to submit the following Senate resolution, which I will read to you and send to the desk. This resolution (S. Res. 231) reads as follows:

Whereas section 4 of the act of June 18, 1929 (providing for the fifteenth and subsequent decennial censuses), provides that "the fifteenth and subsequent censuses shall be restricted to inquires relating to population, to agriculture, to irrigation, to drainage, to distribution, to unemployment, and to mines"; and

Whereas the act of August 11, 1939 (providing for a national census of housing), extends the scope of the population inquiry of the sixteenth decennial census to include the obtaining of information with respect to dwelling structures and dwelling units in the United States; and

Whereas neither of the acts aforementioned nor any other act of Congress authorizes the officers and employees of the United States charged with the duty of taking the sixteenth decennial census to make inquiries with respect to income; and

Whereas notwithstanding the absence of authority to make inquiries with respect to income, questions 32 and 33 on the forms prepared by the Bureau of the Census to be used by the enumerators in taking the Sixteenth Census are as follows:

"Amount of money wages or salary received (including commissions) (1939).

"Did this person receive income of $50 or more from sources other than money wages or salary?" (1939); and

Whereas no justification can exist for officers and employees of the United States to lawfully arrogate to themselves the power to make unauthorized inquiries into the private affairs of citizens; and

Whereas it is particularly dangerous for officers and employees of the United States to abuse their authority in cases where citizens may tolerate such abuse of authority because of their fear of being prosecuted criminally: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Director of the Census and the Secretary of Commerce should immediately cause to be deleted from the population schedule proposed to be used in taking the sixteenth census inquiries 32 and 33 now appearing upon such proposed schedule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] will be received and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator to say that there is no act of Congress or statute which gives it as the sense of Congress that the census form should contain a question concerning income?

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LODGE. Then this is being done on the personal initiative of the Secretary of Commerce?

Mr. TOBEY. Beyond peradventure.

Mr. LODGE. I venture the guess that if that were understood widely the American people would consider it high-handed and outrageous.

Mr. TOBEY. I think the Senator is quite correct. We have a little over 120,000,000 people in this country, most of whom are what is called the great working class or middle class of people. The home life of America is represented by them. Perhaps they do not know so much about the matter of balancing the Budget or the question of foreign debts or tariff matters. But they do know that they are up against the guns when there is an inquisitorial campaign on, when political snoopers come around and ask these questions they have no right to ask under the law, and I predict right now that if they are persisted in you will get the greatest backwash of righteous indignation that you ever witnessed in America.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I suggest that if we continue as we have in the past in debating this item the body will not even get a million dollars to spend.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the resolution introduced by the senior Senator from New Hampshire include questions 32 and 33, which he has discussed?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes; just those two questions.

Mr. LUCAS. And those two questions are the only ones that the Senator, as I understand, is complaining about.

Mr. TOBEY. I am more outraged by those than the others, but particularly those, because they are not provided for by statute, and they are entirely de novo in this questionnaire.

Mr. LUCAS. Then, as I understand, the two questions, 32 and 33, are the only new ones that have been included in the questionnaire by the Secretary of Commerce in the taking of the census.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. I return to a certain portion of the letter written by Mr. Hopkins to the distinguished Senator. On page 2 he says:

As to asking people who rent their homes the amount of rent they pay, that question was first placed in the census list in 1930 under President Hoover.

Does the Senator agree that that is true?

Mr. TOBEY. I will accept that at par.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not know what the Senator means by accepting the question "at par."

Mr. TOBEY. I will accept it at its face value.

Mr. LUCAS. The only question that I am concerned about in connection with that statement is whether or not the Senator from New Hampshire agrees to that.

Mr. TOBEY. I agree to that.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the Senator thinks it is a good thing for the census enumerators to find out what the tenant is paying for rent.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is putting words in my mouth. I said I agree with that statement of Harry Hopkins that it was done under Mr. Hoover.

Mr. LUCAS. I am asking the Senator whether he agrees that it is a good thing in connection with taking the census for the census enumerator to find out from the tenant what he is paying in rent?

Mr. TOBEY. I do not think he should by any means; no.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words that is about on a par with asking a man what his income is?

Mr. TOBEY. It is next door to it.

Mr. LUCAS. There is not much difference between ascertaining what my income is and what the poor tenant has to pay for the rent of his home?

Mr. TOBEY. And how often he makes payment, and when he made the last payment, and so forth and so forth ad nauseam.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum, with the view of seeing if we cannot get a vote after getting a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Ellender	La Follette	Reed
Andrews	Frazier	Lee	Reynolds
Austin	George	Lodge	Russell
Barbour	Gerry	Lucas	Schwartz
Barkley	Gibson	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Bridges	Glass	McCarran	Sheppard
Brown	Green	McKellar	Smathers
Bulow	Guffey	McNary	Smith
Burke	Gurney	Maloney	Stewart
Byrd	Hale	Mead	Taft
Byrnes	Harrison	Miller	Thomas, Okla.
Capper	Hatch	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Chavez	Hayden	Murray	Tobey
Clark, Idaho	Herring	Norris	Townsend
Clark, Mo.	Hill	O'Mahoney	Tydings
Danaher	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Pepper	Wheeler
Donahey	King	Pittman	White

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 9, line 9.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri and other Senators demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURKE (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BARKLEY (when Mr. CHANDLER's name was called). I announce that my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is unavoidably absent because of illness. I am not authorized to say how he would vote on this question.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is unavoidably detained on official business. I promised him that if he could not return to the Senate in time to participate in the vote I would protect him. I am informed that if present he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote because of a pair.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TYDINGS. I announce that my colleague [Mr. RADCLIFFE] is detained from the Senate on important business.

Mr. LUCAS. My colleague [Mr. SLATTERY] is absent on important public business.

Mr. McNARY. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] has a pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. If my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART (after having voted in the affirmative). I had not noticed the absence from the Chamber of the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN]. I am advised, however, that he would vote as I have voted. I therefore will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. McNARY. I announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. If present, I am informed that he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent attending the funeral of the late Representative Dowell, of Iowa.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in important committee meetings.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] has a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY].

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] has a pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea" and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—34

Adams	George	Lodge	Stewart
Barkley	Gerry	Lucas	Taft
Bridges	Glass	McKellar	Tobey
Brown	Hale	Maloney	Townsend

Chandler	King	Truman

So the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. McCARRAN. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Missouri on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 13, after the word "skis" and the parenthesis, to strike out "$2,420,000" and insert "$2,406,520", so as to read:

Safety regulation: For all expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of title VI of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 and all other provisions of said act relating to safety regulation, except air-traffic control, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; fees and mileage of witnesses, including expert witnesses; employment of attorneys and examiners on a fee basis (not to exceed $7,500); salaries and traveling expenses of employees detailed to attend courses of training conducted by the Government or industries serving aviation; purchase (including exchange), operation, maintenance, and repair and overhaul of aircraft; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $29,200), hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles; special wearing apparel and equipment (including snowshoes and skis), $2,406,520.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 2, after the word "of" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "$2,500,000" and insert "$2,000,000", so as to read:

Establishment of air-navigation facilities: For the acquisition and establishment of air-navigation facilities, including the equipment of additional civil airways for day and night flying; the construction of additional necessary lighting, radio, and other signaling and communicating structures and apparatus; the alteration and modernization of existing air-navigation facilities; and for the acquisition of the necessary sites by lease or grant, $5,265,280, of which amount $2,000,000 shall be available for the payment of contractual obligations authorized to be incurred prior to July 1, 1940: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated, the Administrator may, prior to July 1, 1941, enter into contracts for the purchase, construction, and installation of additional air-navigation facilities not in excess of $2,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 15, to reduce the total appropriation for the Civil Aeronautics Authority from $27,900,693 to $26,721,954.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the total at that point will have to be changed.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I was about to suggest the necessity of changing the total because of the action of the Senate in rejecting the committee amendment on page 9, line 9.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will be authorized to correct the totals.

The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Civil Service Commission", on page 13, line 21, after the word "including", to insert "not to exceed $25,040 for the work heretofore performed by the Council of Personnel Administration and"; and on page 14, line 22, after the word "for", to strike out "$5,000,000" and insert "$4,975,000, of which not to exceed $175,000 shall be available for reimbursement of the Veterans' Administration for services rendered the Commission in connection with physical examinations of applicants for and the employees in the Federal classified service", so as to read:

For three Commissioners and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including personal services required for examination of Presidential postmasters, and including not to exceed $25,040 for the work heretofore performed by the Council of Personnel Administration and not to exceed $2,500 for employment of expert examiners not in the Federal service on special subjects for which examiners within the service are not available, and for personal services in the field; for medical examinations; for necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under the direction of the Commission, and for expenses of examinations and investigations held elsewhere than at Washington, including not to exceed $5,000 for expenses incident to attendance at meetings concerned with problems of public officials, educational groups, Government employees as such, and other similar organizations, which are peculiar to the interests and business of the Commission, when specifically directed by the Commission; for furniture and other equipment and repairs thereto; rental of equipment; supplies; advertising; telegraph, telephone, and laundry service; freight and express charges; streetcar fares not to exceed $300; stationery; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, directories, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, not to exceed $10,000; charts; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of motortrucks, motorcycles, and bicycles; garage rent; postage stamps to prepay postage on matter addressed to Postal Union countries; special-delivery stamps; and other like miscellaneous necessary expenses not hereinbefore provided for, $4,975,000, of which not to exceed $175,000 shall be available for reimbursement of the Veterans' Administration for services rendered the Commission in connection with physical examinations of applicants for and the employees in the Federal classified service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 25, to reduce the total appropriation for the Civil Service Commission from $97,266,000 to $97,241,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Communications Commission", on page 18, line 22, after the word "Commission", to strike out "$2,091,340" and insert "$2,051,340", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For seven Commissioners, and for all other authorized expenditures of the Federal Communications Commission in performing the duties imposed by the Communications Act of 1934, approved June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1064), the Ship Act of 1910, approved June 24, 1910, as amended (46 U. S. C. 484-487), the International Radiotelegraphic Convention (45 Stat., pt. 2, p. 2760), Executive Order No. 3513, dated July 9, 1921, as amended under date of June 30, 1934, relating to applications for submarine cable licenses, and the radio-telegraphy provisions of the Convention for Promoting Safety of Life at Sea, ratified by the President of the United States, July 7, 1936, including personal services, contract stenographic reporting services, rental of quarters, newspapers, periodicals, reference books, law books, special counsel fees, supplies and equipment, including purchase and exchange of instruments, which may be purchased without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5) when the aggregate amount involved does not exceed $25; improvement and care of grounds and repairs to buildings, not to exceed $5,000, purchase and exchange (not to exceed $15,000), maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use in the field, travel expenses, including expenses of attendance at meetings which in the discretion of the Commission are necessary for the efficient discharge of its responsibilities, reimbursement to ships of the United States for charges incurred by such ships in transmitting information in compliance with section 357 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, expenses of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household goods and other personal effects (not to exceed in any case 5,000 pounds) of officers and employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty upon specific authorization by the Commission, $2,051,340, of which amount not to exceed $1,246,340 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia, including compensation of employees of the Interdepartment Radio Advisory Committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 3, to reduce the total appropriation for the Federal Communications Commission from $2,116,340 to $2,076,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Loan Agency—Electric Home and Farm Authority", on page 21, line 20, after the word "expenses", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That all necessary expenses (including legal and special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, care, repair, and disposition of any security or collateral now held or acquired on or before June 30, 1941, by the Authority shall be considered as non-administrative expenses for the purposes hereof", so as to read:

Electric Home and Farm Authority, salaries and administrative expenses: Not to exceed $600,000 of the funds of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, established as an agency of the Government by Executive Order No. 7139 of August 12, 1935, and continued as such agency until June 30, 1941, by the act of March 4, 1939 (Public Act No. 2, 76th Cong.), shall be available during the fiscal year 1941 for administrative expenses of the Authority, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833); not exceeding $3,000 for expenses incurred in packing, crating, and transporting household effects (not exceeding 5,000 pounds in any one case) of personnel when transferred in the interest of the service from one official station to another for permanent duty when specifically authorized in the order directing the transfer; printing and binding; lawbooks and books of reference; not to exceed $200 for periodicals, newspapers, and maps; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including legal and special services performed on a contract or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, care, repair, and disposition of any security or collateral now held or acquired on or before June 30, 1941, by the Authority shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Home Owners' Loan Corporation", on page 29, line 23, after the word "expenses", to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a force account, contract, or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, protection, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property belonging to the Corporation or in which it has an interest, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof", so as to read:

Not to exceed $22,000,000 of the funds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, established by the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 (48 Stat. 128), shall be available during the fiscal year 1941 for administrative expenses of the Corporation, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833); expenses (not to exceed $3,500) of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Corporation when specifically authorized by the Board of Directors; printing and binding; lawbooks, books of reference, and not to exceed $500 for periodicals and newspapers; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; use of the services and facilities of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Federal home-loan banks, and Federal Reserve banks; and all other necessary administrative expenses: Provided, That all necessary expenses (including services performed on a force account, contract, or fee basis, but not including other personal services) in connection with the acquisition, protection, operation, maintenance, improvement, or disposition of real or personal property belonging to the Corporation or in which it has an interest, shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Works Agency—Office of the Administrator", on page 34, line 21, after the word "expenses" and the colon, to strike out "Not to exceed a total of $200,000 from the funds herein-after made available to the agencies placed under the general direction and supervision of the Federal Works Administrator by part 3 of Reorganization Plan Numbered I, shall be transferred, as directed by such Administrator, to this paragraph, and be available for", and insert "For", and on page 35, line 21, after the word "laws", to insert the following proviso: "Provided, That the Administrator in order to effectuate part 3 of Reorganization Plan Numbered I submitted and approved pursuant to the Reorganization Act of 1939 may transfer to this appropriation from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units of the Federal Works Agency such sums as represent a consolidation in the Office of the Administrator of any of the administrative functions of said constituent units", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For salaries in the Office of the Administrator in the District of Columbia, including the salary of a General Consul at $10,000 per annum, and other expenses of said Office, including printing and binding (not to exceed $8,000); actual transportation expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence and other expenses to persons serving, while away from their homes without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Administrator; purchase (including exchange) of law books and other books of reference, periodicals, and press clippings; not to exceed $700 for the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; not to exceed $1,500 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings or conventions relating to the work of the Agency; not to exceed $10,000 for the employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise, for special services determined by the Administrator to be necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and the civil-service and classification laws, $250,000: Provided, That the Administrator in order to effectuate part 3 of Reorganization Plan No. I submitted and approved pursuant to the Reorganization Act of 1939 may transfer to this appropriation from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units of the Federal Works Agency such sums as represent a consolidation in the Office of the Administrator of any of the administrative functions of said constituent units.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Buildings Administration", on page 40, line 11, before the word "of", to strike out "$8,963,245" and insert "$8,938,245", so as to read:

Salaries and general expenses, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia maintained and operated by the Public Buildings Administration, including the National Archives Building; repair, preservation, and equipment of the Treasury Annex, city post office, Auditors' Building, Liberty Loan Building, and customhouse; per diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Commissioner of Public Buildings, not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia, and such employees in emergencies may be entered on duty subject to confirmation by the Federal Works Administrator; rent of buildings; demolition of buildings; expenses incident to moving various executive departments and establishments in connection with the assignment, allocation, transfer, and survey of building space; traveling expenses and carfare; leather and rubber articles and gas masks for the protection of public property and employees; furnishings and equipment; arms and ammunition for the guard force; not exceeding $40,090 for purchase, repair, and cleaning of uniforms for guards and elevator conductors; and the purchase of two motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; $8,938,245, of which amount not to exceed $500,000 shall be available for major repairs and improvements to public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal-aid highway system", on page 44, line 3, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,120,000" and insert "$1,110,000"; in line 5, before the word "to", to strike out "$100,000,000" and insert "$99,990,000"; and in line 9, after the numerals "633" and the parenthesis, to insert "less $10,000 transferred to the Federal Works Administrator for the administrative expenses of his office", so as to read:

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916 (39 Stat. 355-359), and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, to be expended in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended, including not to exceed $1,110,000 for departmental personal services in the District of Columbia, $99,990,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, which sum is the amount authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year 1940 by section 1 of the act approved June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 633), less $10,000 transferred to the Federal Works Administrator for the administrative expenses of his office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 16, to reduce the total appropriation for the Public Roads Administration from $141,000,000 to $140,990,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Works Administration", on page 48, line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$3,610,000" and insert "$3,585,000", so as to read:

Not to exceed $3,585,000 of the funds appropriated by the Public Works Administration Appropriation Act of 1938 shall be available for administrative expenses of said Administration, which administrative expenses shall include personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses, in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended (5 U. S. C. 821-833); printing and binding; purchase including exchange of lawbooks, and books of reference, and not to exceed $500 for periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services; not to exceed $500 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Commissioner, at meetings concerned with the work of the Administration; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; and all other necessary administrative expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "United Housing Authority", on page 49, line 17, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$4,550,000" and insert "$4,510,000"; on page 50, line 17, after the word "by" to strike out "the Informational Service Division of the Authority, or any other division or subdivision thereof, in connection with the collection, preparation, or dissemination of information concerning the activities of the Authority" and insert "the Authority in connection with its informational service functions, including press and related activities, photographic displays, exhibits, and other educational or descriptive pamphlets or materials, printing, binding, and reproduction of materials involving informational service functions"; and on page 51, line 1, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$152,000" and insert "$50,000", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: Not to exceed $4,510,000 of the funds of the United States Housing Authority, established by the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U. S. C., Supp. IV, 1401), shall be available for all necessary administrative expenses of the Authority in carrying out the provisions of said act, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; printing and binding; reproducing, photographing, and labor-saving devices and office appliances; not to exceed $5,000 for the purchase and exchange of lawbooks and other books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, and press clippings; not to exceed $4,000 for purchase of seven motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes; not to exceed $2,500 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the Administrator, at meetings or conventions concerned with the work of the Authority; not to exceed $15,000 for the preparation, mounting, shipping, and installation of exhibits; not to exceed $25,000 for employing persons or organizations, by contract or otherwise, for special reporting, engineering, technical, legal, and other services determined necessary by the Administrator, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, and the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: Provided, That of the funds made available under this paragraph, the amount used by the Authority in connection with its informational service functions, including press and related activities, photographic displays, exhibits, and other educational or descriptive pamphlets or materials, printing, binding, and reproduction of materials involving informational service functions, shall not exceed $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 18, after the word "is", to strike out "occupied by" and insert "rented with the knowledge and consent of such public-housing agency to", so as to read:

Annual contributions: For the payment of annual contributions to public-housing agencies in accordance with section 10 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U. S. C., Supp. IV, 1410), $10,000,000: Provided, That, except for payments required on contracts entered into prior to the date of enactment of this act, no part of this appropriation shall be available for payment to any public-housing agency for expenditure in connection with any low-rent housing project, any portion of which is rented with the knowledge and consent of such public-housing agency to any person other than a citizen of the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this amendment was inserted after a question was raised as to the House language. The matter has been called to the attention of one or two Members of the Senate. I understood the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] was going to present the matter, but he is not present. The members of the Housing Authority say that the language the committee put in would not accomplish that which the committee had in mind. The original language provided that no payments could be made to a public-housing agency if any of the property was occupied by an alien. The committee felt that that would impose a burden which it would be practically impossible to discharge. For instance, there might be on the property an alien servant or a brother or a cousin who was an alien. The committee changed the provision so as to make it applicable when the property was rented to an alien. Now the Housing Authority says if we leave it in that form it will still involve a great degree of policing to ascertain the facts. They suggest an amendment which I am about to offer and which I think is a proper one. In order that the amendment may be in proper form, I first ask that the committee amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 51, line 18.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ADAMS. I now offer the amendment to which I have referred.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 51, line 17, it is proposed to strike out the words "any portion of which is occupied by" and insert in lieu thereof "unless the public housing agency shall have adopted regulations forbidding admission to the project as a tenant of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment will be stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading United States Maritime Commission, on page 71, line 15, after the numerals "1936", to strike out "$125,000,000" and insert "$164,000,000", and in line 18, after the word "including", to strike out the comma and "but not limited to," so as to read:

To increase the construction fund established by the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, $164,000,000, of which not to exceed $5,000,000 shall be available for administrative expenses of the United States Maritime Commission, including the following: Personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; travel expenses in accordance with the Standardized Government Travel Regulations and the act of June 3, 1926, as amended, including not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance, when specifically authorized by the chairman of the Commission, at meetings concerned with work of the Commission; printing and binding; lawbooks, books of reference, and not to exceed $4,000 for periodicals and newspapers; contract stenographic reporting services; procurement of supplies, equipment, and services, including telephone, telegraph, radio, and teletype services; purchase and exchange (not to exceed $3,000), maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles for official use; typewriting and adding machines, and other labor-saving devices, including their repair and exchange; rent, including heat, light, and power, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; expenses (not exceeding $15,000) of packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of household effects and other personal property (not exceeding 5,000 pounds in any one case) of employees when transferred from one official station to another for permanent duty, upon specific authorization by the chairman of the Commission; expenses incurred in preparing and transporting, to their former homes in this country or to a place not more distant, the remains of employees who may die while in the discharge of their official duties abroad or in transit thereto or therefrom, and for the ordinary expenses of interment of such remains; necessary expenses (not exceeding $5,000) incident to the education and training of personnel of the Commission detailed at institutions for scientific education and research as authorized by the act of August 4, 1939; compensation as authorized by said act of August 4, 1939, for officers of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Coast Guard, detailed to the Commission; allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act of June 26, 1930; and including not to exceed $75,000 for the employment, on a contract or fee basis, of persons, firms, or corporations for the performance of special services, including accounting, legal, actuarial, and statistical services, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Veterans' Administration", on page 73, line 21, after the word "administering", to strike out "$101,403,240" and insert "$101,228,240", so as to read:

Administration, medical, hospital, and domiciliary services: For all salaries and expenses of the Veterans' Administration, including the expenses of maintenance and operation of medical, hospital, and domiciliary services of the Veterans' Administration, in carrying out the duties, powers, and functions devolving upon it pursuant to the authority contained in the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to consolidate and coordinate governmental activities affecting war veterans," approved July 3, 1930 (38 U. S. C. 11-11f), and any and all laws for which the Veterans' Administration is now or may hereafter be charged with administering, $101,228,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 7, to reduce the total for the Veterans' Administration from "$580,180,544" to "$580,005,544."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 8, after the word "That", to strike out "no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes except for cooking purposes: Provided further, That", so as to read:

Total, Veterans' Administration, $580,005,544: Provided, That no part of this appropriation can be used for hospitalization or examination of persons other than veterans unless a reciprocal schedule of pay is in effect with the Agency or Department involved.

Mr. McNARY, Mr. GURNEY, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I should like to call the particular attention of the Senate to the words proposed to be stricken from the bill on page 78, and to what I believe would be the result if such action should be taken. The words proposed to be stricken out are:

No part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes except for cooking purposes.

To eliminate those words from the bill would strike directly at the dairy producers and also at the ex-service men who are confined in Veterans' Bureau hospitals. The adoption of the amendment would cut down the market for the butter produced by the dairyman; it would take away from the sick ex-service man in the veterans' hospitals real, pure butter, and would make it possible for the veterans' hospitals to give the service men oleomargarine instead of butter. Therefore, I trust that the committee amendment will be rejected.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I think little need be added to the explanation which has just been offered by my colleague from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY]. I merely wish to state that I wholeheartedly support his position, and favor the restoration of the language proposed to be stricken out, which, as I understand, for many years has been in bills of this character.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in explanation of the action of the committee, I think it should be said that there is nothing in this bill requiring the Veterans' Administration to purchase only oleomargarine. In many instances physicians have prescribed oleomargarine for their patients and advised them to avoid the use of butter. I know of Members of this body who have been so advised by the physician at the Capitol who attends Members of this body.

The elimination of this language would simply make it possible to purchase oleomargarine in any case in which the officials of a hospital, or the doctors in charge, thought it wise that oleomargarine be used. Nowhere is there any justification for writing into the laws of the country a provision that a certain product shall not be used in a hospital or any other place under the jurisdiction of the Government.

That was the reason why the committee acted as it did.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, this type of restriction or limitation on an appropriation was first embodied in the law as a result of the efforts made by my former colleague, the late Senator John J. Blaine. The question arose again in 1938, when an effort was made on the floor of the Senate to strike a provision of this kind from one of the appropriation bills. At that time the same contention made by the Senator from South Carolina was advanced in support of the amendment to strike the provision from the bill. Therefore, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will indulge me for a few moments while I refer to the original statistics upon which the amendment offered by my late colleague was based.

It has been contended again and again by those who have sought to eliminate such a provision as this that there was no contemplation that any large amount of oleomargarine would be purchased in case the provision was eliminated. Therefore, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it was the large utilization of oleomargarine in veterans' hospitals and other public institutions which in the past led to the incorporation of this language in appropriation bills.

In the 11 national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers there were used in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, 91,356 pounds of butter and 502,407 pounds of oleomargarine or butterine.

In the 5 United States prisons, for the same fiscal year, there were used 20,139 pounds of butter, and 196,627 pounds of oleomargarine or butterine.

In the 51 veterans' hospitals to which this particular amendment relates under United States Veterans' Bureau supervision there were used 979,918 pounds of butter and 157,073 pounds of oleomargarine for cooking purposes only.

In two of the five United States hospitals for soldiers at present in service there were used 214,780 pounds of butter, and 11,872 pounds of oleomargarine or butterine.

In the Marine hospitals under the Public Health Service there were used in that fiscal year 187,759 pounds of butter, and 8,804 pounds of oleomargarine.

In the United States naval hospitals, 15 in number, there were used 250,875 pounds of butter, and no butterine or oleomargarine.

It will be observed from these figures that prior to the enactment of legislation of this character, oleomargarine was used in varying degrees, but in many of the public institutions under the supervision of the United States there was a considerable utilization of oleomargarine in the diet of the persons in those institutions. As I see the matter in the light of this past experience, we may very well assume that if this restriction is withdrawn, and the supervisory officials of these various institutions have the opportunity to work out their dietary allowances in amounts of money, we shall again find oleomargarine playing an important part in the diet of those who are dependent upon these institutions for their subsistence.

Mr. President, I do not believe that at this late date the Senate of the United States wants to go on record as withdrawing this protection to the veterans, and thus permitting the veterans' hospitals to utilize oleomargarine within their discretion in the diet of patients in the veterans' hospitals. I do not believe we have reached such a pass that it is necessary for the Government of the United States to stint the diet of the veterans.

This provision is contained in numerous appropriation bills. There has been a constant effort to bring about its repeal; but I contend that, in the light of the facts which existed prior to the time Congress established this precedent, we should continue it, and that we should provide that the appropriation should not be utilized for the purpose of purchasing oleomargarine to be included in the diet of those under the care of the United States Government in various hospitals and other institutions.

It has been contended, as the Senator from South Carolina suggested, that doctors have prescribed oleomargarine or other butter substitutes in the diet of those who are not able to utilize butterfat; but, Mr. President, in the light of past experience, I think it is amply evident that unless the Congress retains this policy we shall find that there will be further utilization of butter substitutes, not as a means of taking care of the rare cases in which individuals because of their physical condition cannot utilize butter, but a condition will be reestablished such as prevailed before these restrictions were written into appropriation bills. Furthermore, we may rest assured that if this particular amendment is agreed to, similar efforts will be made to eliminate this safeguarding provision from other appropriation bills as they come along in the course of the present session of Congress.

Therefore, I share the hope expressed by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] that this amendment of the committee will be rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say only one word in response to what the Senator from Wisconsin has stated.

First, I am very happy to say that the motion in the committee to strike out this language was made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], not by the Senator from South Carolina; but I think the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin shows the wisdom of the action.

According to the Senator from Wisconsin, prior to the time this language was placed in a bill, a considerable quantity of oleomargarine had been used in the hospitals of the country. It is true, of course, that the greater part of it was used for cooking purposes. Therefore, it appears from his statement that those in charge of the hospitals did not deem it unwise to use oleomargarine. If it had been impure, it could not have been sold; the Government itself would have prevented it. When it is pure, and it is sold and can be bought by any citizen, the law is resorted to, not to protect patients in a hospital, but to protect the producers of one commodity against the producers of another commodity.

If my recollection is correct, the State of Wisconsin places a tax upon the sale of oleomargarine. Recently I noticed in the press the statement that the Governor of Wisconsin said he was going to urge upon the legislature of that State that the tax be repealed. I was glad to see the statement, because if one State in the Union adopts the policy of taxing the commodities produced in another State, or if Members of the Congress resort to asking that a law be enacted to protect the producers of one commodity against the producers of another, the inevitable result will be a war between the States among producers of different commodities.

I think that would be unfortunate. It is surprising to me that this provision has not inspired retaliation, that it has not resulted in some of the States saying, "If that is going to be done, then we will enact laws prohibiting the sale of certain commodities in this State."

I think we could well leave to the discretion of the officials in the various institutions of government the determination whether they would use one product or another so long as it is a product whose sale is not prohibited under the pure food law.

I really believe that it is a step in the right direction to remove embargoes against American products.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, every Senator knows the reason behind this effort to exclude from use the particular product now under consideration. Several years ago I was a member of a committee appointed to investigate the cost of living and the question arose as to the use of oleomargarine in place of butter. Dr. Wiley, who was then the head of the Pure Food and Drugs Division of the Department of Agriculture, was a witness, and specific and categorical questions were put to him as to the purity, wholesomeness, and digestibility of oleomargarine as compared with butter. He replied categorically. He said oleomargarine was just as pure, just as nutritious, just as wholesome as butter; and he added one other expression which to me was new. He said, "and when colored with the pure extract of carrot, it is just as pleasing to the eye."

Mr. President, this is a matter which has been before the Congress at various times. I deplore the recent decision of the Supreme Court upholding the power of a State to lay a tax upon the product of another State when the product or commodity is used within the State laying the tax. It seems to me that if one article is just as pure, nutritious, and wholesome as another, and is by some preferred to the other article we should not use the powerful arm of the Federal Government to discredit that article in order to protect a group of States, or one State, from competition. I do not know where this decision of the Supreme Court will land us. Our high-protective tariff is alleged to afford wonderful benefit to a certain group, and it is natural for those who can utilize it to apply it locally. I think the committee was very wise in leaving it to the discretion of those who have charge of public hospitals and other institutions, allowing them to be governed by the conditions they find.

It seems to me that we are embarking on the most dangerous principle that can characterize a free people if we pass this measure and deny protection to a far-flung industry, which, as my colleague has said, is protected under the Pure Food and Drug Act, and say, for the sake of destroying competition, "You cannot come in. No matter how pure, no matter how wholesome, no matter how the other article may be designed, we are not going to allow you to compete with us in our markets."

I think every honest-minded man here sees that that is a dangerous precedent. If there were in oleomargarine anything deleterious, if there were in it anything which might impair the health of or discriminate against anyone in those institutions over which we have powerful control, its use ought to be prohibited; it ought to be outlawed.

I have from time to time tried to call attention to the unfairness of this action. It is not a local matter entirely, because in my State, under the wise provision of our present administration, we have been persuaded and paid to stop producing certain crops. You tried to keep us from going into the cattle business, but I invite you to come to our section and see what we are doing. Up in your God-forsaken part of the country you have to protect your cows and feed them for about 6 months in the year. I can graze mine for 12 months on growing vegetation, except now and then in an exceptionally cold spell, and in all the coastal plain I can sink an artesian well 190 or 200 feet and have the purest water in the world flowing forever. My cows do not have to be stall fed. If you want to invite competition, we are willing to enter into competition, but you have not law enough or men enough, nor have you the right, to prohibit me from making my living as I see fit to make it. The South, in the raising of cattle, surpasses other sections, and has done so for 75 or 76 years, and by virtue of being a great territory, is today the unexploited section of America.

Keep on with this kind of thing, and you will find after a while that the butter will be made in the South, the hogs will be raised in the South, the sheep will be grown in the South, and you will have to pass legislation if you live at all. I am warning you now.

Why do I say this condition exists? The possibilities in the South are untouched. We have about 75 or 80 percent of all the standing timber in America today. Heretofore the rosin and turpentine incident to our pines have made it impossible to convert them into paper, but now the chemists have discovered a process by which they can extract the valuable turpentine and rosin and make the finest paper in the world out of the pulp when these elements are extracted.

We have in the South a kindly climate and a fertile soil. But we did not have any capital. We had to pay to the protected industries all we could make. Now we are getting them down there and I expect we will be protectionists after a while.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of what section is the Senator speaking?

Mr. SMITH. I am speaking of all that section south of the Mason and Dixon's line, and not of the section up in the frozen, God-forsaken part of the country above us, where there is from 6 to 8 months of ungodly cold weather, where people shiver and have to take from us in order to live at all. If it had not been for the protective tariff that would have been, if not a wilderness, at least a semiwilderness, and a semidesert.

The State of Oregon has some very splendid advantages. After a while the farmers there will get the things that will protect their fruit from pests. But by and large it does not behoove us to try to discriminate by a Federal law against a legitimate business of one State as against another. I hope the committee's very timid and very hesitating "We will not say you shall not do it, but we will just say we will leave it to the other fellow," will not prevail.

Mr. President, we are all American citizens, but if we do not watch our step we will be Americans only in name. The change is right on us. The form of our Government, which we have all loved and lived for all these years, is being undermined and taken away. It is said the Constitution is obsolete. The bill of inalienable rights is discarded under the general-welfare clause. God help us!

Mr. President, I would rather suffer personally, in person and property, to save the institutions which have made us what we are, and are capable of making us still greater, if we have the courage, the manhood, and the patriotism to rebuke any man or set of men who, under the compelling condition of a terrible depression, asks us to give up our splendid system of government in order that those whom God did not endow with the capacity of getting rich should be made comfortable at the expense of those who had the capacity to accumulate something for the future.

In conclusion let me say that the backwash of the Revolutionary War and the incidents antedating it, made men who were tried in the crucible of suffering. Those who won their rights had a true appreciation of them. When attempt was made to take those rights from them the Boston Tea Party resulted. Then came the magnificent Declaration of Independence. Then came the victory. Then came the Constitution of the United States, which will never be obsolete so long as real men love liberty. The original articles and the 10 amendments which compose the Bill of Rights of the individual, are as eternal as human nature.

It has been the experience of humanity through the years that those who have power usually want to impose their will on a free, liberty-loving people as well as upon peoples who are neither free nor liberty loving.

Mr. President, we have allowed certain elements to come into our country, and we have justified what we have done on the ground that we are relieving suffering, and relieving this, and relieving that.

The bill under consideration provides for only part of the Government, but, God help us, the aggregate amount proposed to be appropriated in the measure is in excess of what it cost to run the entire Government 40 years ago.

Of course it will cost us untold millions if we propose to run every State in the Union, and set up independent States within the States. As for me, I am not going to vote for such proposals. I have not long to live, but I have a duty to perform to my country, to uphold and carry on what was guaranteed to us by the real p-a-t-r-i-o-t-s. We once had a majority of them. Now we have 130,000,000 people, but many of them are p-a-y-t-r-i-o-t-s.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let us have a vote!

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; but the Senator does not hear such statements very often, and he ought to sit down and listen to this statement.

Mr. President, I am opposed to this kind of legislation. However, the Senator from Virginia, who ought to be my friend, is getting restive under what I have to say. I do not talk much, but when I do I hope I talk to a purpose. I have said at least in part what I intended to say before this session of Congress shall adjourn. I shall later call the attention of the Senate to how far we have gone along the road toward Hitlerism, Stalinism, and communism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 78, line 8.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	George	Lundeen	Schwellenbach
Austin	Gerry	McCarran	Sheppard
Barbour	Gibson	McKellar	Smathers
Barkley	Glass	McNary	Smith
Brown	Green	Maloney	Stewart
Bulow	Guffey	Mead	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Gurney	Miller	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Hale	Minton	Tydings
Byrnes	Harrison	Murray	Vandenberg
Capper	Hill	Norris	Wagner
Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Davis	La Follette	Reed	White
Donahay	Lee	Reynolds
Ellender	Lodge	Russell
Frazier	Lucas	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BARKLEY. I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] because of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 78, line 8. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REED. I wish to be sure of the parliamentary situation. As I understand, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] has moved to disagree to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BURKE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who is detained from the Senate by illness. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER].

I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND]. He is not present, and I do not know how he would vote. I, therefore, withhold my vote.

Mr. MEAD (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who, if he were present, would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. My colleague the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS. I have just heard the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] transfer his pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE]. I am instructed to say that if my colleague, the junior Senator from Maryland, were present and voting on this question he would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. HOLMAN] is necessarily absent. He has a pair. If present, he would vote "nay."

I make the same announcement in behalf of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], who is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

The junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] is absent because of illness. I am advised that if present and voting, she would vote "yea."

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] is absent attending the funeral of the late Representative Dowell, of Iowa. If present, he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is detained from the Senate in an important committee meeting. He is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Texas would vote "yea," and the Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay."

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] are detained on important public business. These Senators are paired on this amendment. I am advised that if present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea," and the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

The Senators from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST and Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] are detained in committee meetings.

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 42, as follows:

So the committee amendment was rejected.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious that we cannot finish the consideration of the bill this afternoon, as much as we had hoped to do so. Therefore, I think we might suspend at this time.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations and treaties, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Paul Edwards, of New York, to be Work Projects Administrator for the District of Columbia.

He also, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Kathleen McT. Gregg to be postmaster at Greensburg, Pa., in place of J. T. Painter, retired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Melvin C. Hazen to be Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a statement with reference to the confirmation of this nomination.

When the Executive Calendar was called last week I asked that action be delayed upon this nomination for the reason that I desired to make an inquiry of the Commissioner. Last November an officer on the police force, Sergeant Brodie, came to see me. I had not previously known the gentleman. He stated that after 16 years' service as a detective sergeant he was to be demoted; that he did not know the reason why, and asked if it could be ascertained by me. I wrote a letter inquiring, expecting to be advised of the reasons for the demotion and thinking that would end my connection with the matter.

To my surprise I received a letter stating simply that a detective sergeant was not treated as a uniformed sergeant, that he was not entitled to a trial, and the Commissioners, and the superintendent of police were not required to give to him any information as to the cause of his demotion; that the reasons for the demotion the Commissioner would tell me privately when he saw me.

I advised the Commissioner that I wanted no private information about the matter; that I assumed it was a public record; and that the people of the District should be entitled to have it; and that certainly any Member of the Senate should be entitled to information as to a public record unless it was of such character that it could be shown that its disclosure would not be for the good of the service.

I wrote two or three letters with the same result. In each letter I was told that when I returned to Washington the Commissioner would talk to me in my office about the matter. I did not want to talk to the Commissioner privately about it. I insisted that he answer me so that I could advise the officer. When I asked last week that the confirmation be delayed, I again wrote asking for the information.

The following morning the chairman of the District Committee, the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], invited me to his office, where the Commissioner and the superintendent of police were. The Commissioner then advised me that he really had not written the letters; that they had been written by one of the attorneys connected with the District government; and he agreed that he should have given to me the information.

I make this statement because ordinarily there is a disposition on the part of those connected with the District government, whenever a Member of the Senate or House makes an inquiry, to attribute to the Senator or Representative an interest in securing an appointment or in securing promotion for some individual employee of the Government. It so happens that in 14 years in the House and in my service here in the Senate I have never spoken to any District Commissioner about any policeman. I have never sought to secure the appointment of a policeman or the promotion for any man on the force. I believed, however, first, that a Member of the Senate ought to be able to secure information as to a public record, and, second, if that record showed that an officer was guilty of misconduct, that he should be dismissed from the force, and if it showed that he had violated any criminal law the officer should be prosecuted just like any other criminal. That was all the officer asked, and it was so reasonable a request that I made it in his behalf.

The Commissioner advised me that he would have a board try this officer; and I have no reason for asking further delay in action upon this nomination. I am satisfied that Mr. Hazen did not personally write me the letters I received. I regret that he signed them, because I do not think it is in the interest of the service in the District of Columbia for the Commission to take such a position. Furthermore, the officers of the police force, whether they be detective sergeants or uniformed sergeants, if they are charged with any misconduct, should be advised as to that alleged misconduct, and should be given an opportunity to answer. If it is a question of efficiency, it is all right to demote a man; but if it is a question of misconduct or violation of a law, every American citizen should have the right to know what he is charged with and have an opportunity to answer the charge.

If the policy followed in this case were generally followed, men who had served, as this man had, for 22 years and for 16 years as a detective sergeant, would never know at what moment they would be demoted to the ranks without any information as to the reason for such demotion. That would destroy the morale of the service.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator should add, and will be glad to add when I invite his attention to the matter, that under the rules or under the law the defendant in this case—if we may call him a defendant—is entitled to a trial by a board not connected with the Police Department, a board of citizens of repute who will be named by the Commissioners; and that will be done.

Mr. BYRNES. The chairman of the committee [Senator KING] suggested that such a board be provided for the trial of this officer. That is all the officer asked. I have no interest in the man holding his job if he has violated any law. I became interested when I learned, to my surprise, that it was possible for a man to be demoted for misconduct and not be advised of the misconduct of which he was supposed to be guilty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Melvin C. Hazen to be Commissioner of the District of Columbia? Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John C. Mahoney to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, last week the nomination of a successor to Judge Mahoney as judge of the District Court for the District of Rhode Island was confirmed by the Senate; but at the time there was no vacancy, and there will be none until Judge Mahoney's nomination as judge of the Circuit Court of Appeals is confirmed. I therefore ask that notification of the confirmation of his nomination be immediately sent to the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John B. Tansil to be United States attorney for the district of Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Cleon A. Summers to be United States attorney for the eastern district of Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles H. Cox to be United States marshal for the northern district of Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William F. Burguson to be United States marshal for the eastern district of South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Reed Sharp to be United States marshal for the middle district of Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

PUERTO RICO

The legislative clerk read the nomination of George A. Malcolm to be Attorney General of Puerto Rico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard will be confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters will be confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, February 8, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. RAYBURN].

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the way, the truth, and the life, we laud and magnify Thy glorious name. O Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world, have mercy upon us; in Thee power, love, and compassion are eternal and everlasting. Let Thy holy hand be laid upon us; blend the discords of our natures into heaven's harmony and soften the tears of repentance into psalms of victory. O Thou Christ, do Thou still call across the centuries to heartsore humanity; Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Oh, come and let hunger-bitten lips be fed, chilled bodies be clothed; come, and may the stranger be received, the sick visited, and thus weave for our immortal souls robes of righteousness that our blessed Lord and His saints will approve. In the name of Jesus Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1157. An act for the relief of Roy D. Cook, a minor.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7805) entitled "An act making supplemental appropriations for the Military and Naval Establishments, Coast Guard, and Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendment No. 5 to the bill (H. R. 8067) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted the following resolution:

Senate Resolution 228

FEBRUARY 6, 1940.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CASSIUS C. DOWELL, late a Representative from the State of Iowa.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now adjourn.

Pursuant to the foregoing the Vice President appointed Mr. GILLETTE and Mr. HERRING as members of said committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DOUGHTON assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, our able and beloved Speaker is unable to be present, as he is suffering from a slight case of influenza. He is confined to his bed and the House physician forbids his coming to the sessions of the House. I am happy to say that he is improving and the doctor is confident he will be able to return to his duties within a few days.

The Speaker could designate a Speaker pro tempore, but if he did so, some question could arise as to the authority of the Speaker pro tempore to appoint conference committees and sign enrolled bills. There will be ready for signature several enrolled bills today and tomorrow, and it is necessary that they be promptly signed so that they may be transmitted to the President.

In order that this may be accomplished, I shall offer a privileged resolution, and in connection with this I may say that the procedure has the concurrence of the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 377

Resolved, That Hon. SAM RAYBURN, a Representative from the State of Texas, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

Resolved, That the President and the Senate be notified by the Clerk of the election of Hon. SAM RAYBURN as Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. RAYBURN resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore and the oath of office was administered by Mr. McCORMACK.

DOMICILE OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF VETERANS' BUREAU

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

(Mr. COCHRAN was granted permission to revise and extend his remarks and include a letter from General Hines and brief quotations from the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill.)

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, Members are continually calling the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments requesting information concerning bills which have been introduced which have for their purpose eliminating the Veterans' Bureau regulations whereby employees are required to be domiciled at the facility where they are employed, or, stating it more plainly, the charges for quarters, subsistence, and laundry, regardless as to whether or not the employee accepts the service.

It has been pointed out, and very properly so, that this works a severe hardship on the personnel, especially those who are married and whose families live close to the facility.

When the independent offices appropriation bill was under consideration by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, Brig. Gen. Frank T. Hines, the Administrator, was questioned at length on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, I include in my remarks that part of the hearings which I refer to:

ADJUSTMENT IN CHARGES FOR QUARTERS, SUBSISTENCE, AND LAUNDRY FOR ORDERLIES AND ATTENDANTS

Mr. WOODRUM. You will recall in the hearings last year that the question of adjustments in the charges for quarters, subsistence, and laundry for field employees was discussed. Have you been able to work out any satisfactory plan for relieving employees from these charges, as I notice that you have not requested any funds for this specific purpose in your 1941 budget.

General HINES. We had up with the Budget the proposition of Q. S. and L. We did not include it in our estimates. We submitted a statement on that subject alone, and with the committee's permission I would like to make some reference to that statement in order that the data may be correct.

First—before I take this up—I had a feeling that when the 8-hour day was put into effect, we would be in a better position definitely to determine the personnel that had to be at the station at the time meals were served.

In other words, the hours run generally from 7 to 3; from 3 for the next 8 hours; and then the midnight shift. During that period those that are serving when one meal is served, in my judgment, should pay for only one meal. Those are serving hours when two meals are served, necessarily cannot leave their duty to go and get meals. Their work is right there. The mealtime is limited. Those that are living off the station certainly could not go and get back within a half hour allowed for the noonday meal.

I thoroughly believe in the fairness of only charging them for the meals served during the period they are there; they can take them and eventually we will have to adjust this matter before complaints subside in that respect.

I think the Budget, after we had presented this statement, felt that I should endeavor within the funds allowed to see how far I could go, because they did not include any new money for that.

Mr. WOODRUM. We gave you $2,000,000 a year or two ago for that specific purpose, did we not?

General HINES. Yes. In the appropriation for the fiscal year 1937 we were allowed $2,000,000 which permitted us to partially place this program into effect by allowing certain deserving married employees or those with dependents who were then required to take quarters, subsistence, and laundry to be relieved from these charges and live off the stations.

Mr. WOODRUM. There has been such persistent complaint about that that I think it ought to be done. I do not think you can justify, nor can the Government justify, taking a man who lives at home, who does not have to take his meals out, or lives on the station, and take out of his wages money for those meals. In some cases it reduces the wages to less than $70 a month, on which a man with a family would find it difficult to live. I do not think we can stand up and defend that. I do not think I can do it any longer.

Mr. CASE. I think the chairman is absolutely right about that.

General HINES. Let me present to you what I presented to the Budget.

"In connection with our budget estimate for salaries during the fiscal year 1941, I desire at this point to discuss a problem with which this Administration is presently faced, namely, the deductions now made from the salaries of certain employees for allowances furnished, particularly that for subsistence. Under our present policy incumbents of certain types of positions are considered foodhandlers and their appointment on a salary plus subsistence basis is mandatory. Included in this group are nurses, dietitians, cooks, mess and hospital attendants.

"We have had numerous appeals during the past few years from certain of these employees living off the hospital reservations, from whose salary full subsistence is deducted notwithstanding the fact that they do not partake of three meals per day, as they are off duty during one or more meal periods daily."

Mr. CASE. At that point, has not subsistence also been charged against them during the time that they have been on leave or on vacation?

General HINES. We have taken that into account by figuring that into the total number of days and arriving at the rate charged. It looks as though they are charged for that, but that is taken into account in fixing the rate.

Mr. CASE. I recognize that that is true, but they do not understand that.

General HINES. I know that.

Mr. CASE. I have been hounded by friends of employees who say, "How can you possibly justify charging them for subsistence during the 2 weeks or the month that they may be on leave?"

General HINES. That is true, but at the same time they went into that and took it into account. But I fully agree with you that it is a difficult position to defend because it does appear that they are being charged. In reality the rate was fixed with that in view. To continue my quotation:

"The inauguration of the 8-hour day has further increased the number of employees so affected. Recently this problem has become more aggravated and there has been rather widespread agitation for an adjustment of our policy and I have been advised, by sources believed to be reliable, that the Appropriations Subcommittee will give serious consideration toward providing additional funds for this purpose unless the Veterans' Administration and the Bureau of the Budget take appropriate action. I would much prefer that this be worked out as an administrative measure rather than as the result of congressional legislation which, I believe, would be too broad in its application."

I think there is that danger on the floor. I am not talking now about the committee, but I believe that if an attempt were made to put an amendment in, it would go through.

"It is estimated that there would be approximately 8,451 employees affected by this adjustment in the 1941 fiscal year. Based on a minimum average of $270 per annum for subsistence, this would require an additional $2,281,770. It is proposed, however, to make mandatory the acceptance of such meals as are served during the work period of the group of employees involved for which payment will be made, for individual meals served. To compute the approximate amount which would be obtained in this manner, it is estimated that this number of employees would average one meal per day at the rate of $90 per annum for 11 months each year, which allows for annual leave, and totals approximately $697,000. It is anticipated that the number of employees who would partake of two meals per day would be offset by those on sick leave or off duty on Sundays and holidays. This last-named amount, representing refunds, must under present law be deposited into 'Miscellaneous receipts, Treasury Department,' which would not aid our appropriation.

"Through the adoption of the above procedure there is another potential saving which would assist in reducing the estimated cost of $2,281,770. The reduction in the number of meals or rations served to these employees should result in some saving in the cost of raw food purchased. I am somewhat dubious as to whether this cost would be reduced in direct proportion to the reduction in the number of meals served this group of employees, but I am, however, estimating a saving of $700,000 on this basis.

"In view of the above calculations, it appears that this adjustment in the deductions now made from the salaries of employees for subsistence who are not residing on the respective field station would require $1,500,000 in addition to the amount requested for salaries in the 1941 Budget estimate."

Mr. WOODRUM. On that basis, that would not go into operation until July, would it?

General HINES. That is right, unless you made it immediately available.

Mr. WOODRUM. How much money would you have to have to put that into effect January 1?

General HINES. We feel the amount we suggested to the Budget, $1,500,000.

Mr. WOODRUM. What about the rest of this year?

General HINES. That is a full year. The rest of this year would be half of that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Seven or eight hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WOODRUM. General, I think I am speaking the unanimous opinion of this committee when I say that I would like to see that done. I think I can say that if it means a deficit, this committee would back you up. If there is any gentleman of the committee that does not agree with that statement, I would like to have him express himself.

General HINES. I am willing to undertake it, and with that understanding we would not have to have this appropriation immediately.

Mr. WOODRUM. Would you need any language in the legislation?

General HINES. No.

Mr. WOODRUM. You can handle it administratively?

General HINES. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOODRUM. We have the understanding, then, that in the next fiscal year you will put in this plan that you speak of, and the committee will take care of a deficit if it is made necessary.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. There will still be $90 a year taken out of that, will there not?

General HINES. I cannot see how we can escape that. I cannot understand how a man would leave and go home to get a noonday meal.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What would that average per meal, approximately?

General HINES. About 26 cents.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is quite reasonable.

Mr. STARNES. It would seem he would be foolish to go home, at that.

General HINES. If the Government makes any money on meals it would be the first time it has done it.

I will start putting this into effect this fiscal year, provided I can find the money with which to do it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me say I have discussed this question with General Hines on numerous occasions, as I am heartily in sympathy with the effort being made to correct this situation which cannot be defended. This morning I received a letter from General Hines on the subject, which I will insert in the RECORD. The letter follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, February 6, 1940.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: Reference is made to our recent conference, when we discussed the question of quarters, subsistence, and laundry for employees engaged at our various field facilities.

The optional feature of allowances has been given a great deal of study by the Veterans' Administration in connection with its efforts to institute policies and promulgate instructions which have for their purpose the improvement of employment conditions. Our objective is to provide that allowances be optional to the extent that the needs of the service permit. On the other hand, the question of acceptance of quarters by employees is not peculiar to facilities of the Veterans' Administration. The nature of our operations has caused provision to be made for quartering employees on the station and also for providing for other allowances, subsistence, and laundry. These requirements are understood by employees at the time of employment; notwithstanding, relief is afforded whenever possible. The maximum that may be accomplished, however, must accord with the requirements of the service and with available funds.

A policy placed into effect June 1, 1939, provided for relief from quarters charges in the cases of those employees assigned to non-housekeeping quarters, who maintain homes in the vicinity of the station for persons wholly dependent upon them for support. For those in certain positions, however, 40 percent are required to have quarters assigned. According to the policy previously in effect, 50 percent of the employees had been subject to this requirement. Those classified as food handlers, however, have not to date been relieved of the charge for subsistence. At this time consideration is being given to making adjustments in charges for subsistence; that is, study is being made at representative stations to determine the extent of adjustments necessary in applying a policy of charging for subsistence to those living off the station only on the basis of meals served during their tour of duty.

In this connection I desire to invite your attention to the statement I made before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives at the time hearings were being held on the independent offices appropriation bill for 1941, when this subject was discussed in some detail (pp. 611, 612, 613, and 614). I stated, among other things, that our tentative plan involved an amount approximating $1,500,000 per annum and that it would be made effective during this fiscal year, provided funds could be made available from our regular appropriation. As to the fiscal year 1941, it will be my purpose to have further consideration given the matter by the Bureau of the Budget, and it is probable that I will discuss it with the President.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

Mr. Speaker, when Mr. Jacob Baker, representing the United Federal Workers, appeared before the committee he brought up the question. In view of General Hines' testimony the point at issue was quickly disposed of. I quote from the hearings:

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I wish to talk very briefly about one particular item in connection with the Veterans' Administration that I imagine is recurrently familiar to all members of this committee. The situation, however, still exists. It concerns a charge made for quarters, subsistence, and laundry—Q. S. and L.—to a great many people who work in the Veterans' Administration who are unable to avail themselves of the service. I might take just a moment as to the history of this matter.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I do not want to anticipate you, but we have a definite commitment from General Hines, in these hearings, that that is going to be eliminated entirely.

Mr. BAKER. That is splendid.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. The only charge made will be for one meal where the employee is working during the day and has to be there for lunch.

Mr. BAKER. That is very splendid.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And I think he said that the charge would be only 25 cents.

Mr. BAKER. That is fine. That actually does relieve the whole situation.

Mr. Speaker, I hope General Hines will not delay in correcting the situation complained of. There seems no necessity for reporting the bill referred to, but I can assure the membership of the House the committee will act if it later develops action is necessary.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 378

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, to wit:

Interstate and Foreign Commerce: RUDOLPH G. TENEROWICZ, Michigan.

Merchant Marine and Fisheries: MICHAEL J. KENNEDY, New York.

Post Offices and Post Roads: PIUS L. SCHWERT, New York.

World War Veterans' Legislation: ALBERT SIDNEY CAMP, Georgia.

Insular Affairs: JOHN EDWARD SHERIDAN, Pennsylvania.

Territories: JOHN EDWARD SHERIDAN, Pennsylvania.

Civil Service: JOHN EDWARD SHERIDAN, Pennsylvania.

District of Columbia: MICHAEL J. KENNEDY, New York.

Census: MICHAEL J. KENNEDY, New York; JOSEPH R. BRYSON, South Carolina; ED GOSSETT, Texas.

The resolution was agreed to.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The Chair laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

FEBRUARY 8, 1940.

The Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I wish to submit herewith my resignation as a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Sincerely yours,

MICHAEL J. KENNEDY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

The Chair laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

FEBRUARY 7, 1940.

The Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Having been selected for membership on the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads, I hereby respectfully submit my resignation from the other committees of which I am at present a member, namely, Census, District of Columbia, Expenditures in the Executive Departments, War Claims, and World War Veterans' Legislation.

Very truly yours,

PIUS L. SCHWERT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a very brief communication.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a very short editorial on the subject of taxes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS]?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE AND CREDIT MARKET

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced today a bill to establish an international trade and credit market based on gold for the purpose of circulating and maintaining gold values and to promote trade with Latin America.

The main objective of this bill is to take some of the buried gold out of the ground in Kentucky and put it to work for the American people. It is becoming more and more obvious that if we continue to monopolize and hoard the gold supply of the world it may cease to have international value.

In that case the American taxpayers would be holding the bag to the extent of $12,000,000,000, an amount equal to the World War debts.

The time has come for a constructive program to save the American people from being mulcted and robbed by foreign gold-producing nations. We have set up a golden calf to worship, which is of no more use to us than the one destroyed by Moses.

The New Deal has blundered blindly into a golden trap of its own setting and has been unable to free itself from its evil consequences. If we continue this mad policy of accumulating gold, such nations as Germany, Italy, and Japan, and other non-gold-producing countries, will say "We can get along on managed currency, and you can keep your buried gold."

My proposal, worked out by Mr. Wolstan Crocker Brown, former monetary adviser to the Republican National Committee, aims primarily to sustain the balance of gold by creating a credit market for exports and imports with Latin America. The plan does not permit the export of gold, but ought to be the means of increasing our trade with Latin America substantially. [Applause.]

AMERICAN FAR EASTERN POLICY

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SATTERFIELD. Mr. Speaker, Japan has had more than 6 months in which to contemplate the termination of a 29-year-old commercial treaty which, after notice to her, expired on January 26, 1940.

The present Sino-Japanese war began on July 7, 1937. Nine days later Secretary Hull issued a broad declaration of the fundamental principles of American foreign policy, and thus Japan has had nearly 3 years to consider the effect of her continued violation of American rights and legitimate interests in China. To date there is no cessation of these acts. On the contrary, the events of each day disclose a continuing and consistent disregard of those treaties and agreements voluntarily entered into by Japan and designed to safeguard national sovereignty and equality of economic opportunity.

I have observed that when the people of this country possess the facts public opinion forms swiftly—and usually it is sound. It is amazing how people here in America have patiently and understandingly followed the long sequel of events leading up to the present state of affairs in the Far East. Beginning with the Nine Power Treaty, signed here at Washington in February of 1922, with Japan a party, Americans have step by step traced developments in Asia until today public opinion, the keystone of this Government, is overwhelmingly in agreement with Mr. John Hay and demands that China be permitted through natural evolutionary processes to gain her liberation. They are taking the long view of the situation, and they are convinced that we are "sowing the wind," in lending our money, our industry, and our political influence to the uses of Japan.

Mr. Speaker, impetuosity has not led them to this conclusion, nor has prejudice played a part. It is a sober judgment of a people who have never condoned tyranny nor failed to indict injustice. A momentous issue of right and wrong confronts the people of America. Shall we continue to be partners with Japan in her unjustifiable invasion of China or shall we refuse henceforth to furnish Japan with materials of war? The time has come for this country to make its decision whether it will give further aid and encouragement to this aggressor. I have an abiding conviction that many of my colleagues voted for the Neutrality Act last year because its intent and purpose was favorable to the nonaggressor nations of Europe. We shall have to decide whether or not our course in Asia in the immediate future shall be for or against the nonaggressor nations. Every Member of this body realized many months ago that when we forsook the application of the time-honored international law in our relationship with the nations of the earth we bade consistency farewell. We have deliberately embarked upon a foreign policy through which we shall henceforth endeavor to search out equity and justice in each problem with which we are confronted, and to make those decisions thereunder which smack not of pious platitudes, but, on the contrary, reflect our determination of finding ways and means to convince the world that this country will not tolerate the aggression of the lawless.

The trend of events in the Orient would have tried the patience of a Job. Americans everywhere have borne, with no small degree, our forbearance with the policies of Japan in China until he who runs may read that Japan has embraced the war philosophy of Germany and Russia. If there is doubt as to this, I refer the House to the following statement from the Japanese War Office. It is that country's definition of what war is:

War is the father of creation and the mother of culture. Rivalry for supremacy does for the state what struggling against adversity does for the individual. It is such impetus, in the one case, as in the other, that prompts the birth and development of life and cultural creation.

I venture to make this prophesy that unless the United States deals swiftly and resolutely with Japan we shall have to endure the chicanery and artful dodging which characterized those familiar events leading up to Munich.

Mr. Speaker, there is every reason that this country should deal promptly with this question. Americans will not exhibit the same degree of forbearance which the British Foreign Office exemplified in its dealings with Hitler. Let us review briefly the successive events in Asia:

First. We laid the cornerstone of American far eastern policy in February 1922 with the signing of the Nine-Power Treaty. Japan was a party to that treaty and solemnly agreed to respect the sovereignty and independence of China, to provide the fullest opportunity for China to develop and maintain herself, to refrain from taking advantage of conditions in China in order to seek special rights and privileges which would abridge the rights of the Chinese and citizens of friendly states.

Second. In September 1931 Japan invaded Manchuria. The League of Nations and the United States considered possible action.

Third. The then Secretary of State, Mr. Stimson, announced the doctrine of nonrecognition, which was concurred in by resolution passed by the League of Nations in 1932.

Fourth. Five years pass and the Sino-Japanese War begins in July of 1937. Mr. Cordell Hull issues a broad declaration of the fundamental principles of American foreign policy, which was communicated to Japan.

Fifth. One month later Mr. Hull issues a public statement reaffirming the previous declaration.

Sixth. One month later China appeals to the League of Nations. The League recommended aid to China.

Seventh. One month later Secretary Hull issues a statement in which the Department of State takes the position that the action of Japan in China is inconsistent with the principles which should govern the relationships between nations and is contrary to the provisions of the Nine Power Treaty of 1922. Thus we named Japan the aggressor.

Eighth. Immediately Japan replies and says, we are not breaking any treaty, we are just trying to get China to abandon her anti-Japanese policy.

Ninth. Approximately another month passes. It is November 1937, and a conference has been called at Brussels with the approval of this country. Nineteen nations attend, among them the United States. Japan does not attend, instead she sends a message that her action in China is purely one of self-defense and especially because of the provocative action of China in resorting to force of arms.

Tenth. One month later Japanese military aircraft bombed and sank the U. S. S. Panay; 2 days thereafter the Japanese Government expressed regret, admitted responsibility, and offered amends.

Eleventh. One month later our Ambassador, Mr. Grew, is writing notes to the Japanese Minister for Foreign Affairs protesting and demanding that the disregard of American property rights and disrespect for the flag cease.

Twelfth. One month later the Japanese Minister Hirota writes our Ambassador that this Government is studying how they can elaborate effective and adequate measures that as soon as possible may put a definite stop to the occurrence of similar events.

Meantime the bombing of civilians goes on in China and Acting Secretary Welles in June of 1938 pens a note to the Japanese Government reiterating this Government's reprobation of ruthless bombing of unfortified localities with the resultant slaughter of women and children, and characterized such methods as barbarous.

In November the world is treated to a rather remarkable document. It is a note from the Japanese Minister to Mr. Grew in which Japan proclaims a "new order" in the Orient.

We are told that Japan at present is devoting her energies to the establishment of a new order based on genuine international justice throughout east Asia, the attainment of which end is not only an indispensable condition to the very existence of Japan, but also constitutes the foundation of an enduring peace and the stability of east Asia. Apparently this new order is to grow out of the benevolent usages of explosives and implements of war in the hands of a ruthless invader.

The American Ambassador in a note to the Japanese Minister in December of 1938 rejected Japan's new order, and stated to the Japanese Government that the United States is well aware that many of the changes in China have been brought about by action by Japan, and that this Government does not admit that there is need or warrant for any one power to take upon itself to prescribe what shall be the terms and conditions of a new order in areas not under its sovereignty, and to constitute itself the repository of authority and the agent of destiny. Following this note no noticeable change in Japanese policy has been made in China. In October of 1939, Mr. Grew, in an address before the America-Japan Society in Tokyo, informed the Japanese people that Americans believe that an effort is being made to establish control, in Japan's own interest, of large areas on the continent of Asia, and to impose upon these areas a system of closed economy. He likewise informed the Japanese people that Americans have been profoundly shocked over the bombing in China not only on the grounds of humanity but also on the grounds of direct menace to American lives and property, and the interference with American rights by Japanese armed forces in utter disregard of treaties and agreements existing between the two countries.

One other event has transpired since October, and that was the expiration of the trade treaty in January of this year. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that the Japanese Government now occupies an anxious seat as indicated by Ambassador Hironouchi's inquiry no longer than this week as to whether or not after January 26 there will be any change in American duties and tonnage rates now imposed upon Japanese imports, and secondly, whether there is any possibility of an exchange of notes between the two Governments defining immediately the future status of trade relations, and lastly, what will be the position of Japanese merchants who have been doing business in the United States under the old treaty's provisions. It would appear that the policy of this Government at the moment is that our trade relations with Japan will remain on a day-to-day basis, but that does not suffice if the day-to-day basis permits the continued sale of scrap iron and other munitions of war to this aggressor nation.

As an illustration of the willful, headlong course of Japan, I refer the membership of this House to its last act to date. The French-owned railroad from Indochina to Yunnan Province is about the last remaining medium over which American exports to and imports from China can pass without first asking the permission of Japan. Within the past week representatives of this Government have pointed out to Tokyo the harmful effect upon American trade with China of the continued bombing of this railroad by Japanese planes. The Japanese Government has not paid the slightest attention to our request.

Then, again, according to the latest news bulletins, a recent sale of 300,000 bushels of wheat has been made to Japan carrying a 30-cents-a-bushel United States Government subsidy. Can it be possible that while the State Department is doing all that it can to bolster a "moral embargo" on airplanes and bombs, the Department of Agriculture is going about the business of filling the stomachs of the pilots of those bombers?

These things have happened since or at about the time of the expiration of our trade treaty with Japan. And they evidence a Japan so far unimpressed either with the representations or protests of our State Department. The Japanese mind is quick to discern these inconsistencies and to note our willingness to go on protesting from month to month. The Congress wishes to move with care and caution in its consideration of this matter—it does not wish to impede or embarrass the State Department in the handling of this problem, but I believe I express the thoughts of the great majority of my colleagues when I say we have a real stake in the Orient, and we cannot afford to shut our eyes to the possibility of a great Japanese Empire stretching away from Siberia to Singapore.

It is highly significant that Japan should continue now to ignore our protests.

Pending in the Congress are at least four bills proposing to prohibit the export by us to Japan of arms, munitions, and the raw materials out of which they are manufactured. Let the State Department deal with this matter if it can. Negotiation will not accomplish the desired results; we have been negotiating since 1922. We are unwittingly fattening the war lords of Japan at the expense of the Japanese people themselves. We are the fabricators of a Japanese menace—a menace built upon American exports. Day by day we build the Japanese Navy and then hunt anxiously for the millions of dollars necessary to build our own battleships to defend our shores.

I believe it to be the wish of the House that the State Department shall inform the Japanese Government of what is expected henceforth of it, and that this should be done early enough in the present session for the State Department to derive the full benefit of legislative action if necessary. Already there is every sign that the Japanese regard our bark as much worse than our bite. Without a more positive American policy, at least to the extent of withholding economic aid to Japan, the present conflict will rage for years. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KITCHENS asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a letter to me from the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull, on the subject of trade agreements and the woolen industry, and I further ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein a letter to me from R. G. Phillips, secretary of the International Apple Association, on the subject of trade agreements and the fresh-fruit industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Secretary of Commerce Hopkins in reply to a letter from Senator TOBEY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein two letters, one written by me and one written to me, on the subject of the Negro's part in American history.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Elections No. 2 may be permitted to sit today during the sessions of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from New York if that is agreeable to the minority members of the committee.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Yes; it is agreeable to all the members, majority and minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I find that the material I attempted to insert in the RECORD yesterday regarding the National Youth Administration and its work at the University of Minnesota amounts to four and one-half pages. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD, notwithstanding the fact that this exceeds the regular limit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The material does not consist of editorials or magazine articles?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it is a report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELOSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein quotations from the letters of Benjamin Franklin and from the daily papers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

UTOPIA IS IN MINNESOTA

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we heard from the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] that South Dakota is a sunshine State. Of course, no one disagrees with the gentleman's statement. However, we have just as fine sunshine in Minnesota, and in addition to that we have 10,000 lakes. We have also suspected for a long time that we have Utopia there, but we have never had exact and definite proof of it before, until we found out that we have a village there that is a veritable Utopia.

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I hold in my hand a very unusual story. It is unusual because it is about a village in my congressional district in Minnesota in which there are no debts, no taxes, and nobody is on relief. Think of it—no debts, taxes, or relief. Can anyone anywhere else in the United States equal that record? Or shall we challenge the whole world?

The village is Long Lake. It is located on one of the most picturesque of Minnesota's 10,000 beautiful lakes and is only a step over the ridge from world-famed Minnetonka, the lake whose sky-blue waters have been made famous in song and verse and Indian legend.

Mr. RANKIN. Any property? Anybody live there?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I have in my hand pictures of the village. It is a very beautiful village, located on one of the most beautiful of our 10,000 lakes. These pictures, here attached to this news article, are of the business district, and of the mayor, W. L. Hursh; of Kenneth Bollum, bank cashier and village clerk; William Bottean, feed-store operator and village trustee; Ross J. Johnston, village council member; "Kipp" Hale, owner of the Buckhorn cafe, and of D. J. Albee, grocer and village trustee, who are all real flesh-and-blood people and who are responsible for this village's excellent condition of affairs.

A short time ago Kenneth Bollum, the village clerk, made the assertion in a public meeting which I attended, that there was no depression, and that business in Long Lake was very good. Read the following article and you will get some idea of what he evidently had in mind.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record and include therein the article which accompanies these pictures.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if that is one of the Government-constructed villages.

Mr. ALEXANDER. No. It is the result of natural growth.

Mr. RICH. I did not think it was.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This village needs no help from the Government.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if the village to which he refers is Hibbing, Minn.?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This is Long Lake, Minn., and it is located in my congressional district.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that on the Mesabe Iron Range?

Mr. ALEXANDER. No; it is just outside of Minneapolis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NO DEBT, NO TAXES, NOBODY ON RELIEF—SOUNDS LIKE UTOPIA; IT'S LONG LAKE, MINN.

(By Lewis C. Mills, Star-Journal Staff Writer)

Listen, you property owners, clutching your tax statements in one hand and a crying towel in the other—

There is a municipality in Hennepin County, Minn., within a 30-minute drive of Minneapolis, where there are no local taxes.

There has been no local levy for 5 years.

Although the village has been incorporated for over 30 years it has no debt and there never has been a bond issue.

There is no public relief.

The village council actually takes in more money than it can spend, and members now are mulling over a plan to eliminate school district, county, and State taxes.

Eventually they even may be able to pay residents a small amount for living there.

Hold on there, now—there can't be any such place.

I didn't think so, either, until I talked with W. L. Hursh, Minneapolis attorney and president of the Long Lake council.

Long Lake is a village of some 250, situated 16 miles west of Minneapolis.

According to Mr. Hursh, it is a typical Minnesota village in all respects except its freedom from debt and taxes.

He claims further that any village could eliminate location taxation by the simple process of spending no more than it takes in.

The trouble with most other municipalities is that they also have a relief problem.

There is no relief problem in Long Lake.

"We have had some people who thought the village should support them," Mr. Hursh said, "but we always have been able to find some responsible relative or some other method of taking care of them."

Long Lake receives no aid from the county, State, or Federal Governments; there is no distribution of surplus commodities and no W. P. A. or P. W. A. work.

Now for the plan to eliminate all taxes.

This is a sort of delicate subject, because the plan involves the Long Lake municipal liquor store—and Mr. Hursh is a dry.

The people voted slightly over 2 years ago to have liquor in the village, and a municipal liquor store has been operating since March 6, 1938.

From then to December 31, 1939, the liquor store showed a net profit of $6,500—more cash money than the village had handled in 5 or 6 ordinary years.

One proposal is for the village to buy up all the property in town, thus removing it from the tax rolls, but permitting the original owners to continue to occupy the property as caretakers. That would eliminate all property taxes.

Then, as the surplus continued to accumulate, each "caretaker" might be paid a reasonable sum for "looking after" the village property.

It sounds silly, and the village probably won't do it, but Mr. Hursh insists County Auditor Al Erickson has been unable to find any flaw in the plan.

Mr. Hursh salves his dry conscience with the comment that the liquor store is patronized principally by visitors from Minneapolis or tourists passing through.

RECORD COLD WEATHER IN MISSISSIPPI

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I suppose the gentleman is now going to give us some information about the power rates?

Mr. RANKIN. I will do that a little later; I am saving that for another address. I will show the gentleman then what the T. V. A. and the R. E. A. are doing for the people of the country.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman going to talk about that picket line the gentleman and I go through every day?

Mr. RANKIN. I am going to hear the gentleman from Michigan on it first.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield, so I can be heard now?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I will not yield now. The gentleman can speak later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, we have had two speeches in the last 2 days about the weather, one from the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] and one from the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]. It seems to me the normal weather, in both South Dakota and Minnesota, has disappeared, and I am going to tell you what has become of it. It went down to Mississippi for the time being. We are now ready to return it with interest.

My home district has been under a sheet of snow ranging from 9 to 24 inches deep and the thermometer has been below zero. I had a letter this morning from a friend of mine at Macon, Miss., which is in latitude 33°, who said that they had had a 24-inch snow and that the thermometer went to 11° below zero. In my home town of Tupelo, Miss., this Minnesota weather that has escaped from that State, and from South Dakota, took the thermometer 14° below zero, which is the coldest in all history. In 1887 the thermometer went to 11° below zero at Tupelo, and in 1899 it went to 11° below zero, but this is the first time it has ever reached as low as 14° below zero. In 1887 there was no snow with the zero weather, and in 1899 there was only 3 or 4 inches of snow. This time the snow ranged from about 9 inches at Tupelo to 24 inches at Macon.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a schedule showing the temperature at Aberdeen, Miss., which is also in my district, for the entire month of January 1940.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman that it will be perfectly all right to return the cold weather if the gentleman will send along the 24 inches of snow?

Mr. RANKIN. I would be glad to send both, I will say to the gentleman from South Dakota, for we have an ample rainfall in that area and do not need the extra moisture, as they do in South Dakota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, you will note from the following temperature readings, taken from the Aberdeen Examiner, that the thermometer never got above the freezing point at Aberdeen, Miss., during the entire month of January, which I am sure is a record for that locality for all time.

Those readings are as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a very able and informative address by the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind the Members of the House that tomorrow H. R. 960, a bill which, if passed, would blanket in practically from 250,000 to 300,000 people into the civil service, is coming up. I want to remind the membership of the House that at the present time there are 480,000 people on the civil-service eligible register in the District, and 500,000 people all over the country are on the eligible civil-service list, making a total of nearly 1,000,000 who are eligible civil-service workers who are not now employed in the Government.

I earnestly hope that the bill, if it cannot be amended to include open, competitive examinations for the civil service, will not be passed tomorrow. Think of the injustice to the nearly 1,000,000 eligible civil-service workers all over the country. They worked for their examinations; they won their spurs, and yet if these non-civil-service persons are blanketed in, how manifestly unfair that will be. The examinations should be open, competitive examinations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on the Wheeler-Lea transportation bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

MORE ABOUT THE WEATHER

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, referred to the remarks of my friend from Mississippi, I may add that I have had a letter from the folks at Hot Springs, S. Dak., where they saw the thermometer change 80 degrees inside of 24 hours, going from 30 below to 50 above. These vagaries of the weather inspired the columnist in the Rapid City Daily Journal the other day to observe that some fears had been expressed that snow would cave in the dome of the Capitol. The writer said, however, that he had no fears on that score as long as Congress is in session to "raise the roof." [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include therein certain definitions of parity offered by the Sioux City Tribune.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would tell us how that place got the name of Hot Springs.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Warm springs and streams make it the South Dakota banana belt where such a thing is possible. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. DE ROUEN (when the Committee on Public Lands was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the committee I may state that the committee has five more or less minor bills that we expect to call up.

I first call up, Mr. Speaker, the bill (H. R. 5688) to provide for the operation of the recreational facilities within the Chopawamsic recreational demonstration project, near Dumfries, Va., by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service, and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. DE ROUEN. I will be very pleased to do that, Mr. Speaker.

This proposed legislation would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to operate recreational facilities within the Chopawamsic recreational demonstration project located in Prince William and Stafford Counties, near Dumfries, Va., transferred to the said Secretary under the provisions of Executive Order No. 7496, dated November 14, 1936, as part of the park system of the National Capital and its environs.

The area, which was very poor farm land, is located within 35 miles of Washington and constitutes an ideal recreational and camping area which is needed for organized camping facilities for various social service and other organizations such as the Associated Charities of Washington. Because of the lack of camping and recreational facilities in the National Capital, the development of the Chopawamsic area is endorsed by all of the social-service agencies of Washington and the various organizations dealing with youth movement.

During the period from October 1, 1937, to September 30, 1938, the area, which is in the process of development and consequently has but limited facilities, accommodated 1,876 campers and collected for the use of the facilities $2,479.50 which sum was deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts. These campers represented the Boy Scouts, the Jewish Community Center, the Y. M. C. A., the Council of Social Agencies, the District of Columbia Cooperative League, and other local organizations.

Through the emergency conservation work program, camping facilities to serve approximately 7,500 people each season will be developed. The enlargement of the camp to meet the needs of the National Capital in this respect will result in an increase of revenue from the use of the facilities, and will necessitate the employment of a number of permanent employees for the maintenance, protection, and operation of the camp.

In the event it is found advantageous to operate the camping facilities indirectly, it is desired to have authority to enter into a contract or contracts with organizations such as the Community Chest, the Community Center, the Boys' Clubs, and so forth, or with reliable and qualified individuals. It is provided that the receipts derived from the operations of these recreational facilities shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter the lands comprising the Chopawamsic recreational demonstration project transferred to the Secretary of the Interior by Executive Order No. 7496, dated November 14, 1936, shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service as part of the park system of the National Capital and its environs.

SEC. 2. The Director of the National Park Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized—

(a) To prescribe and collect fees and charges for such recreational and other facilities, conveniences, and services as may be furnished by the National Park Service for the accommodation of the public within the said area.

(b) To enter into a contract or contracts with any reliable person, organization, or corporation, without advertising and without securing competitive bids for the operation or performance of any such recreational or other facilities, conveniences, and services within the said area.

All revenues collected by the National Park Service, pursuant to the authority of this section, shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 3. The Director of the National Park Service, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is authorized to exercise and perform with respect to the said area all the powers and duties that are conferred and imposed upon him by law in relation to the construction, maintenance, care, custody, policing, upkeep, and repair of the public buildings and parks in the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LIMITATION OF COST OF CONSTRUCTION OF BUILDINGS IN NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 2624) to amend the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 460), as amended, with regard to the limitation of cost upon the construction of buildings in national parks, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limitation of cost upon the construction of any administration or other building in any national park without express authority of Congress, contained in the act approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. 460), as amended by the act of July 1, 1918 (40 Stat. 677), is hereby increased from $1,500 to $3,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Does that give the Department the right to increase the construction cost of any particular buildings from $1,500 to $3,000?

Mr. DEROUEN. Not necessarily. It does this: The construction facilities in the various parks throughout the United States have not been reviewed and increased in 21 years—not since 1918. The first act of 1912 fixed the limitation at $1,000 on this type of construction. The construction is for the repair of buildings, and buildings of small facilities. Then, in July 1918, the limitation was raised to $1,500. Therefore 21 years elapsed, when the cost of materials and labor very greatly increased.

Mr. RICH. Does it state that the Department has the right to increase the cost of buildings?

Mr. DEROUEN. The Congress fixed the limitation at $1,500, not higher.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman does not mean to say that we have not spent any money on parks? We have spent more money on parks in the last 7 years than had been theretofore spent on parks in the last 50 years.

Mr. DEROUEN. That may be true. I have not any remarks to make about that; but I do feel this is justified because the cost of construction and labor has increased. Therefore we should do it in this case, because we have done it for the other departments.

Mr. RICH. What we have to do is to be careful that we do not give the departments discretionary power to spend more and more money, because the gentleman will find that the cost of the upkeep of the parks that he has established and increased the size of in the last 5 years will be a great burden on the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. To say this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]: No construction can be done at all without a special appropriation for it, regardless of the fact that the limit of cost is increased from $1,500 to $3,000. There would have to be special appropriation by Congress just the same.

Mr. DEROUEN. That is true.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. And what type of buildings are these?

Mr. DEROUEN. These are small buildings.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Shelters, and so forth?

Mr. DEROUEN. Shelters, and so forth; accommodations for the public. Those that we have there now are dilapidated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ADMINISTRATION AND MAINTENANCE OF BLUE RIDGE PARKWAY

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 4282, to amend the act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2041), providing for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I shall not object, but I do this for the purpose of calling to the attention of the membership the fact that the microphones used on this floor are not being properly amplified so that the voices of those who speak into them can be heard by the other Members. I trust the gentleman who handles that will see to it that the voice is amplified to a greater extent than is now being done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what this bill is about.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, this proposed legislation would extend the same provisions of law to the Blue Ridge Parkway which were extended by Congress over the Natchez Trace Parkway by the act of May 18, 1938 (52 Stat. 407). The administration of both the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways has been placed under the jurisdiction of this Department, and under the terms of this proposed legislation uniform provisions of law would apply to both parkways.

Under the proposal herein recommended the Blue Ridge Parkway Act of June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2041), would be amended in two particulars: First, by authorizing the extension of the width of the parkway beyond the 200-foot limit prescribed in the above-mentioned act, where the parkway runs through Government-owned lands and where small parcels of Government-owned lands would otherwise be isolated, or where topographic conditions or scenic requirements are such that bridges, ditches, cuts, fills, parking overlooks, and landscape development could not reasonably be confined to a width of 200 feet; second, the above-mentioned act would be amended by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue revocable licenses or permits for rights-of-way across and upon parkway lands, or for the use of parkway lands by the owners or lessees of adjacent lands for such purposes and under such nondiscriminatory terms, regulations, and conditions as he may determine to be not inconsistent with the use of such lands for parkway purposes.

In some instances a relatively small parcel of land under the administration of another department is isolated or segregated from the main reservation by projecting the parkway through such reservation and, as administrative difficulties are frequently encountered by the department or agency having a small portion of its lands so isolated or separated from the main reservation, it may in some cases be preferred to administer such small parcels of land as a part of the parkway. In some instances the topography of the land will not permit parkway standards to be maintained on a width of only 200 feet. This is particularly true when extensive ditches, cuts, and fills are necessary. In addition, scenic requirements cannot be maintained on a 200-foot limitation in the width of the parkway.

The construction of the Blue Ridge Parkway was commenced under the authority of title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933 (49 Stat. 195). After the parkway rights-of-way had been conveyed to the United States it became apparent that it would be in the interest of the United States to authorize former landowners and adjacent landowners to use parkway lands for agricultural and residential purposes where such uses were not inconsistent with the parkway development program. In other cases it was necessary to authorize the use of parkway lands for ingress and egress by adjacent landowners whose lands had been severed by the parkway. It was also found necessary to permit the use of parkway lands for public-utility crossings. While the parkway lands were administered pursuant to the terms of the National Industrial Recovery Act, there was authority to authorize the use of parkway lands for these purposes. However, the Blue Ridge Parkway is now being administered and maintained, pursuant to the provisions of the act of June 30, 1936, by the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), as amended, and it is doubtful whether the parkway lands may be authorized to be used for the purposes described above. The proposed legislation, in addition to authorizing the widening of the parkway in certain cases, would remove existing doubt as to the authority to grant leases and licenses for the stated purposes.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I would like to ask the gentleman, if you are going to grant this permission to the Blue Ridge Parkway and the Natchez Trace to extend that width beyond 200 feet, what does the Public Lands Committee feel will be necessary for the Federal Government to do to improve it as is planned by the parkway?

Mr. DEROUEN. I do not think this adds anything. This really is facilitating and aiding the two agencies, because the development does not require any additional land. This land is Government-owned. This is merely correlating the two agencies of the Department of Agriculture in all of these lands.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEROUEN. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I am quite familiar with what is involved in this bill. From the Department's standpoint, it is just an administrative matter. In the first place, it gives the Department the same powers it now has with respect to the Natchez Trace—that is in some instances if their plans for recreational development might require a little more than the 200 feet—and it only deals with public lands, mind you.

Mr. RICH. It only deals with public lands?

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is right. The Forest Service could let them go over a few feet; or this parkway might strike a piece of forest land that leaves a little triangle, and the Forest Service would much prefer to have the Park Service administer it. It involves no additional expense or financing of any kind. It is administrative. But from the standpoint of the people of Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee there is a vital provision in this bill in which we are deeply interested. It has been the practice of the Park Service to limit the crossing right of the Blue Ridge Parkway to those roads reserved as crossing roads in the deeds of conveyance from the States to the Federal Government. That has shut off a lot of private adjoining landowners who had private roads that they used to go out with. This bill will authorize the Secretary of the Interior to grant revocable permits to that private landowner to cross the Blue Ridge Parkway to get out with his farm products and with his normal travel.

Mr. RICH. Then you are not going to block the private owner from getting across the parkway?

Mr. ROBERTSON. This is to permit them to get out and that is the reason we are so vitally interested. We have a lot of them tied up right now.

Mr. RICH. Are you figuring on making any overhead crossings to speak of that will cost additional funds?

Mr. ROBERTSON. None whatever. Of course, the Park Service has been insisting on the State highway department, when they convey a right-of-way that excludes some adjoining landowner from his normal outlet, to provide him an outlet somewhere else. But that has frequently proven to be expensive. However, if there is any additional expense, it falls upon the State and not upon the Federal Government. This merely authorizes overhead crossings at grade level.

Mr. RICH. As far as the Federal Government is concerned, you figure that because of this bill you are not going to put any more burdens on the Federal Government for the Natchez Trace and Blue Ridge Parkway?

Mr. ROBERTSON. We are not going to put any financial burdens on, but we are going to lift what we think are some unnecessary restrictions upon the people.

Mr. RICH. Well, the people who wanted this were the people in Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee. You fellows came in here with tears in your eyes and got us to make this appropriation. Now you find you have got yourselves into a little trouble and you want to get out the best way you can. But what we want to know is that the people in Pennsylvania are not going to pay any more for your people down there to be accommodated.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Not one red cent.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I think I will object. I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania what more burden do you want than the few hundred millions that are already authorized?

Mr. RICH. I do not want any burden.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. It is one of the crimes of the ages—this Natchez Trace and Skyline Drive. Now the Government has built enough miles of the Skyline Drive for the people of Washington and the tourists to ride over and see the Blue Ridge Mountains on their crest. It is one of the wildest dreams of the New Deal that we ever authorized this thing—500 miles long to the Great Smoky Mountains and the Natchez Trace hooked up with it. The first crime came when the money was taken from relief money without authorization. I think this whole thing and the expenditures that we are fixing on the United States for its future is one of the crimes of the last few years, and I object to anything that facilitates it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman only objects to dispensing with further reading of the bill. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the administration and maintenance of the Blue Ridge Parkway, in the States of Virginia and North Carolina, by the Secretary of the Interior, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1936 (49 Stat. 2041), be amended to read as follows:

"That all lands and easements heretofore or hereafter conveyed to the United States by the States of Virginia and North Carolina for the right-of-way for the projected parkway between the Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountains National Parks, together with sites acquired or to be acquired for recreational areas in connection therewith, and a right-of-way for said parkway of a width sufficient to include the highway and all bridges, ditches, cuts, and fills appurtenant thereto, but not exceeding a maximum of 200 feet through Government-owned lands (except that where small parcels of Government-owned lands would otherwise be isolated, or where topographic conditions or scenic requirements are such that bridges, ditches, cuts, fills, parking overlooks, and landscape development, could not reasonably be confined to a width of 200 feet, the said maximum may be increased to such width as may be necessary, with the written approval of the department or agency having jurisdiction over such lands) as designated on maps heretofore or hereafter approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be known as the Blue Ridge Parkway and shall be administered and maintained by the Secretary of the Interior through the National Park Service, subject to the provisions of the act of Congress approved August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), entitled "An act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes," the provisions of which act, as amended and supplemented, are hereby extended over and made applicable to said parkway: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior, to connect with the parkway such roads and trails as may be necessary for the protection, administration, or utilization of adjacent and nearby national forests and the resources thereof: And provided further, That the Forest Service and the National Park Service shall, insofar as practicable, coordinate and correlate such recreational development as each may plan, construct, or permit to be constructed, on lands within their respective jurisdictions which, by mutual agreement, should be given special treatment for recreational purposes.

"Sec. 2. In the administration of the Blue Ridge Parkway, the Secretary of the Interior may issue revocable licenses or permits for rights-of-way over, across, and upon parkway lands, or for the use of parkway lands by the owners or lessees of adjacent lands, for such purposes and under such nondiscriminatory terms, regulations, and conditions as he may determine to be not inconsistent with the use of such lands for parkway purposes.

"Sec. 3. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to approve and accept, on behalf of the United States, title to any lands and interests in land heretofore or hereafter conveyed to the United States for the purposes of the Blue Ridge or the Natchez Trace Parkways, or for recreational areas in connection therewith."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 11, strike out the word "and", and after the word "development" insert "recreational and other facilities requisite to public use of said parkway."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I am objecting to the passage of the bill if it is proper to do so now, or shall object to it at the proper time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is not a question of unanimous consent. The bill is called up under Calendar Wednesday rules in the regular way.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GREAT SMOKY MOUNTAINS NATIONAL PARK

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6813) to accept the cession by the States of North Carolina and Tennessee of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of the Legislature of the State of North Carolina, approved March 18, 1929, and the act of the Legislature of the State of Tennessee, approved April 12, 1929, ceding to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over and within certain lands within said States as may be acquired for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park are hereby accepted and sole and exclusive jurisdiction is hereby assumed by the United States over such lands, saving, however, to the State of North Carolina and to the State of Tennessee, respectively, the right to serve civil or criminal process within the limits of the area ceded by such State in suits or prosecutions for or on account of any rights acquired, obligations incurred, or crimes committed in such State outside of said park; and saving further to each such State the right to tax persons and corporations, their franchises and property on the lands included in such ceded area; and saving also to the persons residing in said park now, or hereafter, the right to vote at all elections held within the county in which they reside; and saving further to each such State the right to tax sales in such ceded area of gasoline and other motor-vehicle fuels and oil for use in motor vehicles. All laws applicable to places under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, including section 289 of the Criminal Code, as amended (18 U. S. C. 468), shall have force and effect in said park. All fugitives from justice taking refuge in said park shall be subject to the same laws as refugees from justice found in either the State of North Carolina or Tennessee.

SEC. 2. That the portion of said park located in the State of North Carolina shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district for the western district of North Carolina and the portion of said park located in the State of Tennessee shall constitute a part of the United States judicial district for the eastern district of Tennessee, and the district court of the United States in and for each such district shall have jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the ceded area of the said park in such district.

SEC. 3. That all hunting or the killing, wounding, or capturing at any time of any wild bird or animal, except dangerous animals when it is necessary to prevent them from destroying human lives or inflicting personal injury, is prohibited within the limits of said park; nor shall any fish be taken out of any of the waters of the said park, in any other way than by hook and line, and then only at such seasons and at such times and in such manner as may be directed by the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such general rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park and for the protection of the property therein, especially for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, and for the protection of the animals and birds in the park from capture or destruction, and to prevent their being frightened or driven from the said park; and he shall make rules and regulations governing the taking of fish from the streams or lakes in the said park. Possession within said park of the dead bodies or any part thereof of any wild bird or animal shall be prima facie evidence that the person or persons having the same are guilty of violating this act. Any person or persons, stage or express company, railway or other transportation company, who knows or has reason to believe that such wild birds, fish, or animals were taken or killed contrary to the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior, and who receives for transportation the dead bodies or any part thereof of the wild birds, fish, or animals so taken or killed, or who shall violate any of the other provisions of this act, or the rules and regulations, with reference to the management and care of the said park, or for the protection of the property therein for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in said park, or who shall within said park commit any damage, injury, or spoliation to or upon any building, frame, sign, hedge, gate, guidepost, tree, wood, underwood, timber, garden, crops, vegetables, plants, land, springs, mineral deposits, natural curiosities, or other matter or thing growing or being thereon, or situated therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding 6 months, or both, and be adjudged to pay all the costs of the proceedings.

Sec. 4. That all guns, traps, nets, seines, fishing tackle, teams, horses, or means of transportation of every nature or description used by any person or persons within the limits of said park when engaged in killing, trapping, ensnaring, taking, or capturing such wild birds, fish, or animals contrary to the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized by the officers in said park and held pending prosecution of any person or persons arrested under the charge of violating the provisions of this act, and upon conviction under this act of such person or persons using said guns, traps, nets, seines, fishing tackle, teams, horses, or other means of transportation, such forfeiture shall be adjudicated as a penalty in addition to the other punishment prescribed in this act. Such forfeited property shall be disposed of and accounted for by and under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the forfeiture of teams, horses, or other means of transportation shall be in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 5. That upon the recommendation and approval of the Secretary of the Interior of a qualified candidate the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina and the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee shall jointly appoint a commissioner, who shall have jurisdiction to hear and act upon all complaints made of any violations of law or of the rules and regulations made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish, and objects of interest therein, and for other purposes, authorized by this act. Such commissioner shall have power, upon sworn information, to issue process in the name of the United States for the arrest of any person charged with the commission of any misdemeanor, or charged with a violation of the rules and regulations, or with a violation of any of the provisions of this act prescribed for the government of said park and for the protection of the animals, birds, and fish in said park, and to try the person so charged, and, if found guilty, to impose punishment and to adjudge the forfeiture prescribed. In all cases of conviction an appeal shall lie from the judgment of said commissioner to the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina, or the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee, respectively, depending upon the district in which the particular land in said park on which the offense shall have taken place is located; and the United States district courts in the aforementioned districts shall jointly prescribe the rules of procedure and practice for said commissioner in the trial of cases and for appeal to said United States district courts.

Sec. 6. That such of the United States commissioners for the western judicial district of North Carolina and the eastern judicial district of Tennessee as may be designated for the purpose, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, by the respective district courts for such districts shall have authority to exercise the same jurisdiction with respect to offenses against law and the rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, committed within their respective judicial districts, as the park commissioner provided for in this act is authorized to exercise.

Sec. 7. That the park commissioner provided for in this act shall also have power to issue process as hereinbefore provided for the arrest of any person charged with the commission within said park of any criminal offense not covered by the provisions of section 3 of this act, to hear the evidence introduced, and, if he is of the opinion that probable cause is shown for holding the person so charged for trial, shall commit such person for further appropriate action, and certify a transcript of the record of his proceedings and the testimony in such case to the particular district court, which court shall have jurisdiction of the case: Provided, That the said commissioner may grant bail in all cases according to the laws of the United States.

Sec. 8. That process issued by such commissioner shall be directed to the marshal of the United States for the western district of North Carolina or for the eastern district of Tennessee, as the case may be, but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the arrest by any officer or employee of the Government or any person employed by the United States, without process, of any person taken in the act of violating the law or this act or the regulations prescribed by the said Secretary as aforesaid.

Sec. 9. That the park commissioner provided for in this act shall be paid an annual salary, as appropriated for by Congress: Provided, That the said commissioner shall reside within the exterior boundaries of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park or at a place reasonably adjacent to the park, the place of residence to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 10. That all fees, costs, and expenses arising in cases under this act and properly chargeable to the United States shall be certified, approved, and paid as are like fees, costs, and expenses in the courts of the United States.

Sec. 11. That all fees, fines, and costs and expenses imposed and collected shall be deposited by the commissioner, or by the marshal of the United States collecting the same, with the clerk of the respective United States district courts for either the western district of North Carolina or the eastern district of Tennessee, depending upon the district in which the offense for which collection is made shall have taken place.

Sec. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior shall notify in writing the Governors of the States of North Carolina and Tennessee of the passage and approval of this act, and of the fact that the United States assumes police jurisdiction over said park as specified in said acts of the States of North Carolina and Tennessee.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN ALASKA

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6658) to authorize the lease or sale of certain public lands in Alaska, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sections numbered 16 and 36 in Tps. 17 and 18 N., Rs. 1 and 2 E. Seward meridian, Alaska, are hereby released from the reservation thereof made by the act of March 4, 1915 (38 Stat. 1214), for the support of the common schools in the Territory of Alaska, and in lieu of the lands so released an equal area of vacant, nonmineral, surveyed, unreserved, public lands in the Territory of Alaska may be designated and reserved for the support of the common schools in the Territory of Alaska in the manner provided by the act of February 28, 1891 (26 Stat. 796), as amended.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to lease, or to sell at not less than $1.25 per acre, under such rules and regulations and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, the lands released from reservation by section 1 of this act and the public lands in Tps. 17 and 18 N., Rs. 1 and 2 E.; secs. 25, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, and 35, T. 17 N., R. 1 W.; secs. 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, T. 16 N., R. 1 W.; secs. 1 to 11 and 12, T. 16 N., R. 2 W., Seward meridian, Alaska: Provided, however, That all patents and leases issued under the provisions of this act shall contain a reservation to the United States of the oil, gas, and other mineral deposits, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. The provisions of this section are subject to valid existing rights.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, after the parenthesis, strike out the comma and the word "as" and insert a period.

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "amended," and the period.

Page 2, strike out all of line 11 and insert in lieu thereof, "16 north, range 1 west; sections 1, 2, 11, and 12, township."

The amendments were agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ALASKA

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7252) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease for park or recreational purposes, and to sell for cemetery purposes, certain public lands in Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to appraise and sell, or to lease, to any incorporated city or town in Alaska, for park or recreational purposes, not to exceed 160 acres of vacant and unreserved public lands in the Territory, which, in his opinion, are reasonably accessible to such city or town, and to appraise and sell to any such city or town, for cemetery purposes, not to exceed 80 acres of such land: Provided, That each patent issued under the provisions of this act shall contain a reservation to the United States of the coal and other mineral deposits in the land conveyed, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, under rules and regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior.

Sec. 2. From and after the date of enactment of this act, the act of September 30, 1890 (26 Stat. 502), shall not apply to the Territory of Alaska.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, that completes the business of the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARTER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address on the American aviation industry today by Col. John H. Jewett, president of the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce of America, Inc., delivered January 27, 1940, over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was allotted 30 minutes in which to address the House today at the conclusion of the legislative program for the day. Has the legislative program been concluded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following resignation from committees:

FEBRUARY 7, 1940.

HON. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Herewith I wish to tender my resignation from the following committees: World War Veterans' Legislation, District of Columbia, Insular Affairs, Patents, and Census, in order to become a member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee.

Cordially yours,

RUDOLPH G. TENEROWICZ, M. C.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On January 31, 1940:

H. J. Res. 419. Joint resolution to extend, for 3 additional months, the time during which articles imported free of duty for exhibition at the Golden Gate International Exposition or the New York World's Fair may be sold or abandoned.

On February 1, 1940:

H. R. 7293. An act to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make permissive the acquisition of legislative jurisdiction over land or interests in land acquired by the United States.

H. R. 7342. An act to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended.

STATE, COMMERCE, JUSTICE, AND THE JUDICIARY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1941

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8319, State, Commerce, Justice, and the judiciary appropriation bill, 1941, with Mr. BEAM in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For Secretary of State—Under Secretary of State, $10,000; Counselor, $10,000; and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including temporary employees, and not to exceed $6,500 for employees engaged on piece work at rates to be fixed by the Secretary of State; $2,450,000: Provided, That in expending appropriations or portions of appropriations, contained in this act, for the payment of personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, with the exception of the four Assistant Secretaries of State and the Legal Adviser of the Department of State, the Assistant to the Attorney General, the Assistant Solicitor General, and six Assistant Attorneys General, the Assistant Secretaries of Commerce, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in any bureau, office, or other appropriation unit shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended, and in grades in which only one position is allocated the salary of such position shall not exceed the average of the compensation rates for the grade, except that in unusually meritorious cases of one position in a grade advances may be made to rates higher than the average of the compensation rates of the grade but not more often than once in any fiscal year and then only to the next higher rate: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, or (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, or (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, or (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 2, line 8, strike out "$2,450,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,458,000."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is to make this figure allowed the State Department conform to that given other departments of the Government.

The Committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries, ambassadors and ministers: For salaries of ambassadors and ministers, including salaries as authorized by section 1740, Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of April 24, 1939 (53 Stat. 583), as follows: Ambassadors Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, Colombia, Cuba, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Panama, Peru, Poland, Spain, Turkey, Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and Venezuela, at $17,500 each.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Page 6, line 10, after the word "Turkey", strike out the words "Union of Soviet Socialist Republics."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, there are two other amendments relating to this particular subject, one on page 7 and the other on page 17, which I expect to offer. It seems to me it would be advisable to consider these three amendments together because they cover the same subject matter, and if we offer the three of them together, instead of having the three different amendments offered three times and having three fights, we can have the question settled on one occasion.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the other two amendments may be reported for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the other two amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 3, strike out "$660,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$642,500."

Page 17, after line 14, insert "Provided, That no appropriation contained under the caption 'foreign intercourse' shall be used for the maintenance of an embassy of the United States in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or for salaries or any character of expense, other than salaries, for the maintenance of any office or officer of the United States State Department in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that these three amendments may be considered together.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I see no objection to discussing the three amendments at this time and confining the discussion of those amendments to this particular time, with the provision that when those points are reached in the bill the amendments will be voted upon without further discussion. With that understanding I am perfectly content to go along and discuss them now.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I cannot agree to that. I think the three amendments are in fact only one amendment. It is necessary to offer three different amendments because the particular matter to be amended is contained on three different pages of the bill. We ought to vote on them on only one occasion or else we will have separate fights on each one of them.

Mr. CALDWELL. I think perhaps we would be willing to discuss all of them at this time and vote on the amendments without further discussion later, but it would be proper to take them up only one at a time.

Mr. McCORMACK. It seems to me this is for the gentleman's own benefit. I am offering this unanimous-consent request for the benefit of the gentleman who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think these amendments should be taken up in the order in which we reach them, thus disposing of them in the regular orderly way.

Mr. McCORMACK. All right. I withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Are we going to have an opportunity to discuss the amendment which the gentleman intends to propose? I would like to be heard.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. May I ask the gentlemen in charge of the bill on both sides whether liberal debate will be had in view of the fact this is a very important amendment? It has to do with the question of recognition of Soviet Russia, nothing else or nothing more. It is a matter that should be discussed in detail on its merits and demerits. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts ought to have more than 5 minutes to present this matter, and others who want to be heard should have ample time.

Mr. CALDWELL. I may say to the gentleman that this is not the place for the matter to be taken up, nor should it be considered here. This is not the bill under which we should discuss whether we are going to recognize or fail to recognize Russia.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I am not yielding for the gentleman from Florida to make his argument in my time. The question had to do with liberal debate. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 1½ minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Chair to state the time remaining for the gentleman from Massachusetts?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has eight and a half minutes remaining.

Mr. CALDWELL. What was the unanimous-consent request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked unanimous consent to proceed for an additional one and a half minutes. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. CALDWELL. I have no objection, but I shall object to any further extension of time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important and a very serious matter. In offering these amendments I do so only after profound consideration.

The purpose of the pending amendment is to prevent any money appropriated in this bill being used for the payment of the salary of the Ambassador to the Soviet Union, the nation which we all know is more commonly described as Communist Russia. The chairman of the subcommittee has suggested that this is not the proper place to consider this question. He let out his argument in response to a question from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]. This is the proper place. We have the responsibility of appropriating money. True, the question of diplomatic relationship in itself rests with the executive branch of the Government, but under the Constitution we have the power of expressing our own views as a body when appropriation bills are under consideration. In rare cases, such as in the case of the Soviet Union, we are justified in exercising our constitutional power.

The argument that this is not the place for this question to be discussed certainly is irrelevant if advanced from a constitutional angle, because the framers of the Constitution left it with Congress to appropriate money. If Congress has the power to appropriate money, Congress has the power not to appropriate money for any particular purpose.

What are the circumstances which prompted me? In 1933 the Soviet Union was recognized in a semidiplomatic manner, as a result of the so-called Litvinov agreement. In this agreement the Soviet Union as a government gave its express and solemn promise to the Government of the United States and to our people that they would not permit "the formation or residence on the territory of the Soviet Union of any organization or group, and that they would prevent the activity on that territory of any organization or group or any representatives or officials of any organization or group which has as an aim the overthrow or preparation for overthrow or the bringing about by force of a change in the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its Territories, or possessions."

This is a promise made by the Soviet Union to our Government. This promise was broken within 1 month after it was made. This promise has been repeatedly broken ever since it was made. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who was chairman of the special committee that investigated subversive activities, brought out evidence of a direct connection between the American section of the Communist Party and the Third International and the Communist Party of Russia, which is the backbone of that Government, and found that Russia was injecting itself directly into the internal affairs of the United States by furnishing money and contributing in every way possible to that which they hope for, the ultimate overthrow of our Government. The committee of which I was chairman uncovered the same type of evidence of the activity directly in our country of the Third International and the Soviet Government, collaborating with the American section of the Communist Party in their effort to obtain their ultimate objective, of the overthrow of our Government by force and violence.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is it not entirely within the power of the President to accomplish what the gentleman desires and what most of us desire?

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will remember my views—and I speak my own views and I criticize no one, and when I have fixed views I have the courage to attempt to express them and to carry them into operation—I called several months ago for the recall of the American Ambassador when an official of the Russian Government undertook to affect public opinion in the United States on a domestic question. I would not care how it was done, even though he might have made a speech with reference to a domestic matter along lines with which I might have agreed, a soviet official has no right to do that, or the official of any other government.

To give the gentleman a direct answer, yes; but we do not want any political aspects to the consideration of this question today if we can avert it. Let us look at it from our own angle as Members of Congress, determined to do our duty as we see it, whether or not we are going to vote an appropriation to maintain an American Ambassador to the Soviet Union, when we know, and every American knows, that the Soviet Union has repeatedly breached its solemn obligation, and when every American knows that the Soviet Union is doing everything within its power to overthrow established government not only here but throughout the entire world.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Could we not make provision to export the present Communist Soviet Ambassador, who is now in the Nation's Capital, at the same time as we do this?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am trying to address the Committee from the angle that I think is most appropriate on this occasion. I am sure the gentleman from Wisconsin can adequately answer that question. I am sure, also, that if this amendment is adopted, the Soviet Ambassador to the United States will probably be called back to Moscow.

There is a very compelling reason behind my offering this amendment. The Fish committee, the McCormack committee, the Dies committee uncovered evidence warranting it. Within the last year our Government has made protests on a number of occasions to the Soviet Union because of their breaching not only this solemn obligation but other rights possessed by citizens of the United States under international law, and they have all been pigeon-holed. We saw the spectacle the other day when The Assistant Secretary of War made a speech, as he had a right to, and referred to the people of Russia as serfs—and such a reference can be found in history; it is not necessarily an adverse characterization; history records it—we witnessed the Soviet Ambassador going down to the State Department to enter a protest against that mild characterization.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. KERR. I understood the gentleman to say that the recommendations of the several committees which have made investigations were pigeonholed.

Mr. McCORMACK. No.

Mr. KERR. That is what the gentleman said.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; if I did say it, I am glad the gentleman has corrected me. I referred to the protests of the American Government to the Soviet Union.

Mr. KERR. I wanted to find out, if I could, who pigeonholed these reports. The gentleman says he did not say they were pigeonholed?

Mr. McCORMACK. I said the protests of our Government to the Soviet Union have been pigeonholed.

Mr. KERR. I may have misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am pleased to have any misunderstanding removed.

Mr. KERR. I understood the gentleman to say that these reports had all been pigeonholed.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I said that the Fish committee, the McCormack committee, and the Dies committee have shown by incontrovertible, sworn evidence that the Soviet Union and the Third International and the Communist Party of Russia have violated a solemn obligation made by the Soviet Government to our Government.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. I hope the gentleman has observed in the press that the United States district attorney at Detroit just recently has uncovered and produced evidence to the grand jury which has resulted in the indictment of those operating directly with funds furnished by the Soviet Union and its organization to enlist men, in violation of our law, to go over and fight in Spain.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. KEEFE. And those people have been indicted because of such an absolute and flagrant violation of our law.

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly. Furthermore, three were indicted in the District of Columbia for violation of the Foreign Propaganda Registration Act, which my special committee recommended and I had the honor and pleasure of drafting and filing. There is no question about the violation. The only question is whether or not we have the courage to carry out not only our own personal feelings but the feelings of the American people by failing to appropriate this money. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the amendments offered here, the one under discussion now and the two additional ones, are the result, in a measure, of a resolution that I introduced in the House, which was practically the first one entered on the House calendars at the beginning of this session. This resolution provided for the same things which these amendments provide.

The only way to strike at Russian recognition is through this appropriation bill. In the first place, recognition of Russia was had without any congressional action; without any support by the Senate; without any ordinary movement of any of the operating forces which had been in opposition to such recognition; in fact, there was not and never has been used the words "recognition of Russia" in the document, and the only thing that showed that we had recognized Russia was the placing of an Ambassador in Moscow. Not only did we not recognize Russia in the ordinary way, but we did it through a series of letters between the President of the United States and Commissar Litvinov. He had hardly gone away from the National Capital, after discussing these things with the President and making promises, when he began to violate them. Up until the establishment of an Embassy of Russia in the United States, the Amtorg, a supposedly commercial organization, was the one which operated for Russia.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Can the gentleman conceive of any reason why the administration should recognize Russia without the consent of the Congress?

Mr. BOLLES. Yes; I can. I think it was thought at the time—I do not contend that I am a mind reader—there was a great deal of controversy over whether we should recognize the Soviet or not, and, while the President has the power, yet the ordinary procedure with respect to a matter of that importance would be to have the Senate first pass upon it. But the President just did it.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Following the thought of the gentleman, may I suggest that perhaps the reason for recognition, although not valid in the gentleman's own mind, was that Litvinov, acting for Russia and the Soviet Government of that country, gave certain promises to those who handled the United States negotiations. The gentleman is aware also that any promises which were made have been broken.

Mr. BOLLES. Not only that, but among some of the other promises was one to meet some of the debts that Russia owed or an acknowledgment of the debt, and, also, that we should have no further subversive action here. This has been shown by the McCormack committee and the others, yet the Amtorg was the salesman for the Soviet Government in the United States and through it, and through that commercial organization it was stimulating the subversive organizations here from Boardman, in Michigan, to other places through the support of divers and sundry newspapers and various pieces of literature, the distribution of which literature was paid for from the funds of the Amtorg—the Russian organization in America.

When we established an embassy, the Amtorg was dismissed, but, so far as the subversive movements are concerned, they continued. Where were the headquarters established for the Communist Government of Russia in the United States? When they put an embassy here in Washington, was it rushed from the Amtorg to Washington? I would like to know.

I am for this amendment. It is a part of what I had in mind when I introduced my resolution, and we might just as well fight it out right here.

If we want to do something for Finland, we do not have to ship them arms. We can tell the Finnish people, for whom we have sympathy, that we are not in sympathy with the people who are fighting them and murdering them. We can do it emphatically by adopting this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I heard a remark here today that this is not the place to consider striking out the item with reference to the maintenance of our embassy and thus severing our diplomatic relationship with Russia. I say that this is the place and a most opportune time. I am one who invariably opposes the Appropriations Committee legislating on matters of policy, but the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union considering the work of any committee is the superbody that has a right to pass on or change and amend anything and insofar as I am concerned, if I can cripple communism by that method I am going to do it here and now. [Applause.] There is no such thing as a partisan taint or color in the consideration of this matter and I am looking to my colleagues on both sides of the House to take this, the first opportunity, to speak out in unmistakable terms, and in such a way that the fiendish Molotovs and the scoundrelly murderous Stalins will know and remember the American attitude. I will not pay much attention as to the method employed when the objective is the all important thing.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And the gentleman believes also, I think, that the United States should stop buying gold from Russia at twice its actual cost.

Mr. DINGELL. I am in favor of doing anything to cripple the communism of Russia.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And that that money, which we give to Russia for the purchase of gold is used to buy armament with which to fight Finland.

Mr. DINGELL. I would cut off the benefit, if any, right under the ears, and not give a dime to Russian communism under any circumstances. I think the sooner we do that the better off we will be. The Soviet Government, after receiving recognition by the United States, proceeded to violate every assurance given to the Government of the United States. There is not a single, solitary shred of evidence anywhere I know of to show that they have ever fulfilled their end of the agreement or that they intended in the future to proceed in the manner that would inspire American confidence. There was an attempt to gain a profitable objective and then to proceed in the usual way to undermine the Government of the United States. I think that the temper of the House is such as to show the world what we think of the Soviet cause, the Soviet system, and the Soviet relationship. I think moreover that the membership at this time is ready to strangle the monster.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. EATON. Assuming the converse of this, will the gentleman support a motion to take care of Finland by making them a loan with which they may protect their women and children?

Mr. DINGELL. I think my attitude as regards Finland, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark, as well as toward martyred Poland, is well known. I will do anything for them—not only sell them rifles at a dollar apiece, but supply at cost all the ammunition and buckshot they can burn. Yes, I am willing to donate the first Garand rifle for the immediate benefit of Finland and later to do the same for Poland.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. RANDOLPH. A few days ago an argument was advanced on this floor that we should not close the American Embassy in Russia because there were certain so-called facts that we wanted to know. Does the gentleman think that is a valid reason?

Mr. DINGELL. I do not think the argument holds water at all. We are not interested in anything that exists in Soviet Russia today.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I want to express my approval in general of the remarks that the gentleman has made both as to our breaking off diplomatic relations with Russia and also aid to Finland. He has very nearly expressed my thought, and I believe the thought of the American people. Perhaps we ought to do this in another way—but we ought to do it. This is the first time we have yet had a chance to express our sentiments.

Mr. DINGELL. I think the sentiments expressed here on both sides by Members are generally the opinions and feelings of a great majority of the membership of this House, which reflect the attitude of our people. All references and provisions having to do directly or indirectly with anything that concerns Soviet Russia in this bill should be stricken out and there should be no argument on the point at all.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to read from the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 469, in a speech made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS], wherein he said that not a dollar of gold was bought from England or any other nation, not an ounce bought simply to acquire gold, that it was only done in ordinary business transactions. I do that because that is a very remarkable statement.

Mr. DINGELL. If my attitude in the matter is what is being considered, I would say to the gentleman that I would not buy a penny's worth of gold from Soviet Russia.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. This is one of the most important issues with which we will be confronted. We cannot get the full membership of the House here except in one way, and that is by moving that the Committee rise and then making the point of no quorum. I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and nineteen Members are present, a quorum. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, no one has questioned the right of the President of the United States to recognize Soviet Russia. It is true he recognized Soviet Russia against the request of the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the church elements, and most every other fraternal and patriotic group in the United States. Certain definite promises were made at that time by Commissar Litvinov prior to recognition. Practically none of those promises have been fulfilled. Practically every one of them has been repudiated, and so it is perfectly right and fair that the Members of this House should refuse appropriations and stop providing funds to continue an American Embassy at Moscow. I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that this may be one of the most important issues before the House of Representatives.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I am in agreement with the amendment. What I wanted to do was to get the Members here.

Mr. FISH. I think the gentleman is right. I regret that the full membership of the House is not present. This is a great issue, and the main question is whether the House has the courage to face the issue or whether we will just pussyfoot and shadow-box and say we are powerless; that the great legislative body that controls appropriations is impotent; that we have no rights in this matter.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. We have information that at least a part of the compensation that has been paid by this Government to disabled veterans now living in Russia has been confiscated by the Russian Government and used for propaganda to help overthrow this Government. I am for putting a stop to it now.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, my appeal here is on non-partisan grounds. I want the Members of the House, whether Republicans or Democrats, to have the courage to vote their own views, their own conscience, their own sentiments, and their own convictions.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman spoke about the House having courage.

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think that the House, in expressing that courage by a favorable vote on this amendment, would be reflecting the true sentiment of the overwhelming population of this country.

Mr. FISH. That is the very reason I raise that issue, because we are sent here by the people, elected by the people to carry out their wishes, and I believe that 90 percent of the people today are in favor of severing all diplomatic relations with that godless and despotic nation, Soviet Russia. The only question is whether we will be talked out of it; whether we will be told we are going beyond our powers, and are scared out of doing by our vote what we want to do—sever diplomatic relations with Communist Russia.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I was opposed to the recognition of Russia when it was done. I am opposed to it now, and I expect to vote for the elimination of this appropriation.

Mr. FISH. Good for you.

Mr. MAY. But the question I am raising is this: If we do vote for the amendment and eliminate the Embassy in Moscow, may we not remove all sources of information that we might need?

Mr. FISH. Let me answer the gentleman. It has been said upon this floor that we should keep an Ambassador in Moscow to act as a spy. Is that the American way of doing business—to have our Ambassador over there to act in the capacity of a spy? It is something we have never done before. We know that Soviet Russia is not a friendly nation; that it is an unfriendly nation. We know that they are spreading their Communist propaganda all the time through their agencies over here, and the time has come to stop it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. Will the cutting off of the salary of the Ambassador have the effect of severing diplomatic relations?

Mr. FISH. No; but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] proposes, after the will of the House is expressed on this amendment, to follow it with two other amendments which will be completely effective in severing diplomatic relations.

Mr. CELLER. Why does not the gentleman's committee bring in a straightforward resolution severing diplomatic relations, rather than doing this through the back door?

Mr. FISH. Our committee has not even granted a hearing on numerous bills of similar character. This is the first opportunity the House has had to express itself on this issue. Only a few weeks ago Earl Browder of your city and my city was sent to jail. Why? For using forged passports to go over there to learn about communism and to bring back and spread revolutionary communism in the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC].

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, everyone wants to hurt Russia, but you are not going to do it this way. I will go along with the Members of the House if they want to cease diplomatic relations with Russia, but I would rather see something affirmatively done to stop the activities of Russia at the place they can best be stopped. Our frontier is the Karelian Isthmus today. There is no question about it. Through centuries Russia has endeavored to get to the Atlantic Ocean. She is not there yet. You can stop her at one place, and only one place, and that is at the Karelian Isthmus. It is 35 miles across. Three hundred and fifty thousand Finns can hold the line if they have the guns and the planes that they need to do the job.

Let us suppose that they cannot hold the line there. What will be the next step? The invasion of Sweden and then Norway. These countries cannot stand against the hordes of Russia. This means Russia comes to the Atlantic and she comes close to us. I have heard it expressed on all sides that we are going to help England or someone else if we help the Finns. We are helping ourselves, Mr. Chairman. It is bad enough to have the Japanese Navy in the Pacific without having a Russian Navy in the Atlantic. The natural result is going to be a two-fleet Navy for the United States; it has got to be. When Russia reaches the Atlantic our troubles begin.

If you think we can do some good by eliminating our listening post in Moscow, all right, let us throw it out, let us stop the appropriations for this embassy; but in so doing you are not going to hurt the feelings of the Russians and you are not going to stop them in the way you would like to see them stopped. I know that before the Committee on Foreign Relations there are lots of bills to aid Poland and Finland, and I am in sympathy with them. Under the Neutrality Act we cannot do much.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. EATON. What is the sense of sending powder puffs and carpet slippers over to Finland? What they need is guns to defend their women and children.

Mr. IZAC. That is absolutely right. Under the Neutrality Act the President has not yet said that a state of war exists. If we wanted to we might be able even to spare a few destroyers, a few submarines. We might even be able to send a thousand planes.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Would it not be far more advantageous to send some of our American youths over there to help them withstand the assaults of the Russians? Would not that be more effective?

Mr. IZAC. No. The American people, and the gentleman himself, and I are unanimous in not wanting to permit American youth to attempt to determine the course of destiny on the European Continent. [Applause.] But if we are faced with this eventuality, does not the gentleman agree with me that the place to help stop this encroachment of the Bolshevik nation is the Karelian Isthmus?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. My primary interest is to stop the Russian Communists from plotting the overthrow of this Government in the United States. This is the first and only opportunity I have had to vote my views on this proposition.

Mr. IZAC. I wish it could be effective in that direction.

Mr. RANKIN. If American sentiment continues to rise and we continue to investigate and expose them it will be effective.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Does the gentleman from California see any conceivable way by which the adoption of this amendment will tend to decrease communistic activities in this country?

Mr. IZAC. I am forced to admit that I do not.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IZAC. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at the last session the House passed a bill making it a crime to advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States through force or violence.

Mr. IZAC. That is correct.

Mr. WALTER. That bill is now pending in the Senate. It seems to me much could be accomplished if we could urge the Senate to act favorably on that bill and act promptly.

Mr. IZAC. This amendment, however, will not accomplish that purpose. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Celler] is recognized.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I listened to the question asked by the gentleman from Mississippi, wherein he inquired if the passage of this amendment would decrease communism in the United States. I fail to see how merely cutting out the salary of our Ambassador to Russia would have any effect whatsoever on communism in the United States. It may have the contrary effect of stirring up the Communists and making conditions far worse so that we might have a cure that is worse than the disease.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. In just a moment.

We are paying the salary of Mr. Steinhardt. He is the Ambassador. His salary is $17,500. Cutting out the salary of this official would not affect our relations with Russia, for Mr. Steinhardt is a wealthy man and would still continue as Ambassador. Cutting out this appropriation, however, would cause considerable embarrassment to the administration. Frankly, it would give great comfort to Stalin. At least with Steinhardt there, we have direct communication with events in Russia. We would otherwise get our information second-hand. Stalin would not mind that. He wants us misinformed, not properly informed.

I am willing to cut off relations with Russia in every conceivable way, but let us do it honestly, let us do it courageously, let us do it in a straightforward manner. Let the Committee on Foreign Affairs bring in an appropriate resolution to that effect.

Since when do we in this Chamber, or in the cloakrooms, conduct the foreign affairs of this Nation? We have a Secretary of State in whom I, and I am sure you, repose the greatest confidence, because he is, in truth and in fact, a great Secretary of State. And how ably and excellently is Mr. Hull assisted by his aides. I have naught but praise and admiration for the wise and self-sacrificing service of men like Under Secretary Welles, Counselor Moore, Assistant Secretaries Berle and Grady, and many others whose names for the moment escape me. Has Mr. Hull authorized anyone of us to bring forward an amendment of this character? No. He would frown upon such an amendment. He would ask you to vote against such an amendment, because you cannot carry on foreign affairs in this Chamber. We do not know all the facts, we are not conversant with all the factors. The State Department every day in their diplomatic pouches get thousands of communications of which we know nothing; and until and unless we know something of this diplomatic correspondence, those private communications, we dare not in this slipshod fashion, if I may use the word "slipshod" with reference to our diplomatic relations, attempt to sever relations with another country, directly or indirectly.

I loathe Russia, I despise Stalin, I spew at Molotov, I spit upon this man Litvinov; nevertheless, I shall vote against this amendment; I want things done in an orderly and straightforward manner. Let us do all we can in a decent straightforward manner to bring about the situation I might desire or the gentlemen from Mississippi or Massachusetts might desire. Let the Foreign Affairs Committee bring an appropriate resolution. But neither of these men have, I wager, appeared before that committee.

Does the President know about this amendment? Emphatically, no. Does Secretary Hull know about it? Again, no. How ridiculous then to carry on diplomatic relations in such an emotionally forensic manner, without even the knowledge of the President or Secretary Hull.

If such a motion as the gentleman from Massachusetts presents could prevail, then what would be the use of a State Department? Let the Appropriations Committee carry on our foreign affairs.

I repeat, let us sever diplomatic relations in a decent, straightforward manner—not in this haphazard, unusual, unthinkable manner.

I now yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from New York has said that this might stir up the Communists in this country. As Cicero said of Catiline, the greatest victory we can win over them is to drive them from secret treachery to open warfare. When they get ready to rise up, the people of this country will be ready for them.

Mr. CELLER. I cannot see how in the thunder the passage of this amendment will do what the gentleman from Mississippi states it will do. It can have no such effect and I believe it will have quite the contrary effect.

If you want to do something to strike at Russia and communism, help the Finns. I had this to say the other day and I am going to repeat it:

Finland must have ammunition and implements of war to fight her battle, and even our battle, against the Communists. She asks for planes and we give her cookies. She asks for guns and we give her cake. Shall we sit in the bleachers and watch her being slaughtered in the arena of bloody Stalinism?

Let us give this aid honestly, courageously, and fearlessly to Finland and then we will be striking at Russia in a logical manner and in a way that Russia does not want.

WHY BEAT ABOUT THE BUSH? LET FINLAND HAVE LOANS FOR ARMS

Finland must have ammunition and implements of war to fight her battle—and even our battle—against the Communists. She asks for planes, we offer her cookies. She asks for guns, we offer her cake. To vary the simile, shall we sit in the bleachers and watch her being slaughtered in the arena of bloody Stalinism?

My understanding is that when the settlement was made with Finland, the amount funded was $9,000,000, which was set up on a 62-year amortization plan, with interest at 3 percent for the first 10 years and 3½ percent thereafter.

Prior to the funding agreements Finland paid interest in the amount of $309,315.27, and subsequent thereto she paid interest of $4,624,443.27, a total of $4,933,758.54. She has also made principal payments of $957,511.23, so that payments of principal and of interest, both prior and subsequent to the funding agreements, aggregate $5,891,291.77.

The balance of Finland's indebtedness is $8,042,466.77 principal and $100,423.44 accrued interest.

If we eliminate interest, Finland has paid over $8,000,000 on a debt of $9,000,000—practically eight-ninths of her debt to us.

She fights Soviet Russia, which owes our Government approximately $187,730,000 and which owes our citizens approximately $225,000,000.

Think of this—Finland has paid and retired bonds held by our citizens during the past 8 years in the sum of about $80,000,000. If she had followed the example of Russia and other nations and refused to pay, she would have accumulated $8,000,000 paid into our Treasury and $80,000,000 paid to bondholders, or a total of $88,000,000. If she had held those $88,000,000, she would not need our loans. She could now purchase with such sum all the arms and planes she needs. She paid. Others reneged. She is entitled to special treatment.

Under the proposed arrangement, which has the White House approval, a loan of $20,000,000 might be made by the Export-Import Bank, whose capital would be arranged for that purpose. The loan, however, would be made on the condition that the purchase in this country would not include airplanes, arms, and munitions. Under such an arrangement, what is to prevent Finland from taking the American food that she can buy with the money loaned to her and exchanging the same with other nations for such military supplies?

But why put such temptation up to innocent Finland? Where is the consistency so far as our policy toward Finland is concerned? It has been the well-recognized and well-merited rule of the State Department to refuse to recognize any territorial changes brought about by force. For that reason, we refuse to recognize the capture of Manchukuo in China by Japan; we refused to recognize Bohemia and Moravia, which were stolen from Czechoslovakia by Germany. For the same reason we could not recognize any exploitation of Finland by Russia. Why should we not help Finland against the bandit Stalin? We make speeches concerning the sanctity of treaties and international law. We have a Kellogg Treaty, to which scores of nations have been signatories, whereby we exacted the solemn pledge that they would not resort to war as an instrument of national policy. Russia has violated the letter and spirit of that treaty. She seeks to possess Finland by force. She has ditched international law. Shall we encourage her butchery by refusing aid to her victim? Shall we remain stupidly silent in the face of rapine and plunder?

Nay, more, we have sent to aggressor Japan, in her pillaging of China without let or hindrance, scrap iron, copper, lead, and all kinds of military supplies. If we can supply 85 percent of the military import needs of Japan, including planes, equipment, and American bombs to slaughter Chinese women and children, assuredly there should be a way to help the gallant Finns fight the cause of human liberty and prevent ruthless slaughter of innocents. The Finns badly need pursuit planes to fight off Russian bombers. We should help supply them.

We have loaned money to China to the extent of $25,000,000. China is in no way one whit different from Finland, because we have refused to apply the Neutrality Act in the fracas between China and Japan.

In my humble estimation, we subscribe to international anarchy if we do not help poor and helpless Finland—and that help should mean "help." The only help worth while is arms, airplanes, bullets, guns. Cakes and cookies and sandwiches will not do much good to Finland now. I would thumb my nose at some of the psalm-singing hypocrites who agitate against sending her military supplies. The Finns today, in their heroic stand against Stalin's Communist hordes, rank with the Greeks at Marathon, Washington at Trenton, and the Texans at the Alamo.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment because I believe that if it would be adopted it would be a big step toward getting our country involved in European wars. I feel extremely sorry for the poor people in Finland, Russia, Germany, England, France, Poland, and every other country in the world. If the people in the warring countries had the opportunity to vote on a war referendum there would be no wars. It is the unprincipled demagogues in every country who are responsible for the wars that are going on today.

A great deal has been said about Russia trying to overthrow our Government. I have said many times that we would not have to live in fear of our Government being overthrown by Russia or by any other power if we Members of Congress will pass legislation to provide employment for the 9,000,000 people who are unemployed and take care of the 25,000,000 people who are in need of food, shelter, and clothing.

History shows that the nations which took care of its people were not undermined by outside powers. Countries have been undermined by its own people who were deprived of freedom of speech, freedom of assemblage, freedom of religious worship, and other fundamental principles to which all mankind is justly entitled. Let us not become involved in European conflicts. Our great country will be able to do more to bring about world peace by remaining neutral. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, in view of the interest that has been shown in this matter and the number of requests that have come to me, I ask unanimous consent that the time of debate on this amendment be extended 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL]?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, every Member on this floor knows what this amendment attempts to do. We do not have to sit here 20 minutes to get any further information. If we extend the time, it will only give those who are opposed to this amendment a chance to organize. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of debate on this amendment be extended 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL]?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we had an agreement for a half hour, which was agreeable to everybody.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order against the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDREWS. By unanimous consent it was agreed that debate on this amendment would last 30 minutes. That time will be up in 3 minutes. That is not supersedable by another motion, only by another unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition for the purpose of speaking on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman for 5 minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no Member of this House who is better informed as to the machinery of it than the gentleman from Massachusetts. He knows that every year prior to the consideration of this bill in the House weeks are spent by the committee in considering all of these matters. He has had this same feeling about the Soviet Union for years. He knows and has known that the proper and orderly procedure is to come before the committee and present his case.

Temperamentally and impulsively I am inclined to agree with all the expressions that have been made with reference to the Soviet Union. It, and everything it stands for, is repellent to me. But let us not grow wild on this subject, wave a bloody flag, and get ourselves involved any deeper in the conflict that now exists than we are.

The President on December 1 made this statement:

The news of the Soviet naval and military bombings within Finnish territory has come as a profound shock to the Government and people of the United States. Despite efforts made to solve the dispute by peaceful methods to which no reasonable objection could be offered, one power has chosen to resort to force of arms. It is tragic to see the policy of force spreading, and to realize that wanton disregard for law is still on the march. All peace-loving peoples in those nations that are still hoping for the continuance of relations throughout the world on the basis of law and order will unanimously condemn this new resort to military force as the arbiter of international differences.

Let us keep our feet on the ground and use good, common, hard sense. Ask yourselves what single good purpose can be served by the approval of this amendment? When you have asked yourselves that question, you will come to the very definite conclusion that nothing will have been done other than to provoke a great nation of the world to further excess and to involve us further in diplomatic entanglements.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. No; I am sorry I cannot yield.

It is bad policy to establish the principle that the maintenance of diplomatic relations with another government implies approval of the form of government of that country or of the actions and policies of the government of that country. If that were the case, it would appear to be necessary to consider the advisability of discontinuing diplomatic relations with several other governments now pursuing policies and objectives which the Government and the people of the United States do not approve.

The argument is not sound. You are being swept off your feet by sentimentality. You are not being logical; you are not being careful in the handling of the major affairs of this Government. You cannot afford to legislate in such a way. I insist that you want to be careful, you want to be calm, and you do not want to do anything here today that will involve this country, but you take the responsibility for doing just that if you adopt this amendment and throw the red flag in the face of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Chairman, there are a number of reasons why this amendment ought not to be adopted.

No other country has broken off diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia during this recent tense period, and even the French and British Governments, although at war with Germany, have not withdrawn their diplomatic missions from Moscow.

One of the primary objectives of the foreign policy of the United States is to maintain peaceful relations with all countries. Certainly the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Russia would not be in conformity with our endeavor to maintain such peaceful relations. It is generally considered that when diplomatic relations between two governments have been severed the possibilities of dangerous and acrimonious controversy are increased through the absence of official representatives in the capitals of each country and the opportunity directly to discuss such questions as may arise between the two governments.

If diplomatic relations were broken off, in the case of Soviet Russia particularly, we would be at the mercy of propagandists and special pleaders for information with regard to that country and we would be unable to verify through our own official channels such information as might be put forward by those having special interests in the Russian situation.

Should the occasion arise for the President to be of assistance in furthering the aims of peace, it would be important to have diplomatic relations with Russia in order that his viewpoint might be accurately presented to the Soviet Government.

As far as concerns the question of communism, the severance of relations would not remove this problem from the sphere of domestic activities in this country. It would probably drive such activities underground. The matter of dealing with communistic activities in this country is a problem of domestic concern and is at this time being well handled by the Government and local authorities, as has been shown by recent events.

Let me call your attention finally to one feature that has already been mentioned in the Committee of the Whole.

Diplomatic representatives are often more necessary and can do more during periods of tense relations with a foreign country and are often more useful and necessary in those periods than when the relationship with that particular country is easy and on a more amicable basis. During periods of tense relations, the presence of a diplomatic mission becomes essential for the protection of American citizens and property in the other country.

As long as we have officials in Russia we have eyes and ears there, and we have the means of being of some assistance to American nationals. When you take the Ambassador and your foreign officials away, you leave every American national in Russia at the mercy of Russia, and then we have no implement to assist them, we have no means of knowing what is going on over there, and we have no means of protecting our interests, and our interests in Russia are major. To sever relationships will simply damage us and cannot help us. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired; all time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. FISH, and Mr. DUNN) there were—ayes 88, noes 86.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. CALDWELL.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 105, noes 108.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out line 9, on page 6.

Mr. Chairman, the vote just taken indicates that a large number of the Members of this House, nearly a majority, are in favor of severing diplomatic relations with Russia. While the vote was not taken on that specific issue, I am sure that if the Committee on Foreign Affairs would bring out a resolution and give us a direct opportunity to vote on the question there would be an overwhelming sentiment in this House for such action. [Applause.]

Some have said that no aid should be given to Finland because it might involve us with Russia. Just what aid are we now giving to Russia? We in the United States are making it possible for Russia to get $35 an ounce for every ounce of gold that is produced in Russia at a cost of $12 an ounce. We are taking Russia's supply of gold and are paying them a premium of tens of millions of dollars every year. Therefore, instead of making loans to Russia, we have given them outright gifts out of the United States Treasury and from the American people with which to buy war supplies and other materials to destroy our friends in Finland.

What more are we doing to help Russia? We are subsidizing the exports of our wheat and other agricultural commodities, and we are paying bonuses and subsidies to Russia so they may get wheat with which to feed their soldiers and supplement other necessary supplies.

Therefore, there is no reason in the world why we cannot aid Finland and help these courageous men and women in their fight for the preservation of the democracies of the world against the dictatorships. We should take action in this House to provide that friendly aid which will be of material assistance to them, rather than give aid and succor to the enemy. I hope the Committee on Foreign Affairs will bring out a resolution that will make possible the necessary aid to Finland.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOOK. For the gentleman's information, I may say there is a bill before the Ways and Means Committee providing for the authorization of a loan to Finland and I wish the Ways and Means Committee would act on that bill now.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The Ways and Means Committee could, but someone has said here today that we cannot aid Finland on account of our neutrality law. Well, we are giving aid to Japan under our neutrality law and we are giving aid to Russia because Russia has not been declared unfriendly to the United States. But for some reason or other there has been a cooling off process among some of the administration leaders as to a loan for Finland. I hope that these leaders have not been intimidated by Russian representatives. It is our business to discontinue that unholy alliance we now have with Russia.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The Neutrality Act is not involved, because that act has never been invoked with respect to the conflict between Russia and Finland.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. No; or as far as Japan is concerned; because we could stop the war in China within 60 days if we would stop the shipment of war supplies to Japan; but for some reason—maybe we are not in on the hidden secrets of the State Department—they take no action to help our friends in China, and now they are cooling off and about to take the same attitude toward that friendly country of Finland, after they have met their obligations to us and are one of the few surviving democracies of the world. We can give material aid to Finland without becoming involved in the European war. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, I have listened with great interest to the speeches that have been made here today in connection with the conduct of the Soviet Republic in world affairs. I heartily agree with the denunciation that has been uttered as to the actions of the Soviet in its relationship with other countries. I deplore the events that have resulted from Russia's repudiation of every promise and agreement.

In my opinion, it is equally important for us to discuss the happenings in our own country on the part of public officials which, in any way, may transgress upon the rights of our citizens. Recently, in the Federal court of the eastern district, 17 men were arraigned and each one was held in $50,000 bail. Although these men were charged with a serious crime against the Government, bail in the amount of $50,000 is certainly excessive. I do not believe there is any precedent for such exorbitant bail, especially in view of the excellent records of most of the arrested men. However, I am not personally concerned with this phase of the case because I do not know any of the individuals, nor do they live in my district. My interest in the matter arises out of the conduct of our Government officials after the arrest. I believe what then happened to these men was a definite violation of their constitutional rights as well as an occurrence which we would very loudly protest if it were permitted in a foreign country. I refer to the publication of their pictures in a recent issue of a weekly magazine in such a manner as to seriously reflect upon the men. This magazine published a complete front view and a side view of each arrested man and across the chest was an identification tag indicating that the picture was taken by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The release of these pictures, printed in a publication, evidently with the approval and consent of the Department of Justice, was grossly unfair to the arrested men and a practice which has no sanction either in law or in common decency.

My only purpose in discussing this matter today upon the floor of the House of Representatives is to direct the attention of the Congress to this situation, with the hope that the practice of the Department of Justice in making available for publication in the press pictures of an arrested person will be stopped. Under our Constitution every man is considered innocent until proven guilty, and we should do everything possible to protect that right. I appreciate the attention and interest of the House in my talk, and I hope that as result of our action here today we shall see this vicious practice immediately discontinued. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words—"$17,500 each."

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] did not prevail. I will agree it was not the proper procedure, but it was the only opportunity this House has had or is apt to have to express its will on the recognition of Soviet Russia. We cannot report out any bill from the Foreign Affairs Committee, because the administration dominates it and is against it, and it could not come before the House in any other way than it came just now. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] will offer a motion to recommit, so that every Member of the House may have an opportunity on a roll-call vote to go on record whether he is in favor of severing diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. I do not think the gentleman meant to say that anybody dominates the rank and file of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. FISH. No; I will change the word to "influence," if that will satisfy the gentleman, because, naturally, under any administration the Secretary of State has influence and should have influence with the majority on any committee, particularly Foreign Affairs, and I assume that would be so under a Republican administration. I know it has been, and I know it is likewise true under your administration.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. As one member of the majority party and a member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, I would welcome more frequent meetings of that committee in order to take up these important matters. I think it is a crying shame—

Mr. FISH. Oh, the gentleman knows that three or four bills have been introduced to sever diplomatic relations with Russia, and that we have not had a hearing on one of them.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. FISH. And I think the gentleman will find that the State Department is against such a hearing, and I think that he will find also that is the reason we have not had any hearings. The gentleman is a member of that committee, and is a member of the majority party, and he should try to have such a hearing.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. On page 17 of the bill I will offer another amendment. There is no need of offering one on page 7 now in view of the action of the House just taken.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I wish the chairman of the subcommittee, and the minority ranking member of the committee would pay attention, and I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] to also give his attention to these remarks. I do not know whether it is the intention of the committee to leave out Belgium. Belgium, as I understand it, has an ambassadorial status the same as 10 or 11 nations, and I think it should be included in this bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know what question the gentleman has asked me.

Mr. FISH. Oh, I see that Belgium is in a separate clause by itself, on lines 12 and 13.

Mr. RAYBURN. My reaction to this whole thing is that the House of Representatives is not the place to settle our diplomatic or foreign affairs when we have duly constituted authorities to do that very thing.

Mr. FISH. We have the power to do so, and I hope the House will always exercise that power.

Mr. RAYBURN. I hope the House will never do it in this way.

Mr. FISH. In its own judgment and wisdom after discussion on both sides of the proposal. I have moved to strike out the last two words, "$17,500 each" for the purpose of asking why the American Ambassadors from England, from France, and from Belgium have been brought home. Can it be that they have been brought home just on the eve of the outbreak of the full fury of the European war to tell the American people that the British subjects and the French citizens and the Belgian citizens are in favor of a third term? So far all we know from those Ambassadors is that they have made public announcements in America that they are in favor of a third term because of the danger of swapping horses in the midst of a European war. If they are to earn their $17,500, it seems to me that they ought to be at their post of duty in the midst of this war.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. EATON. I rise to ask if the gentleman received an answer to his question as to why Belgium is left out of this list?

Mr. FISH. I find that it is taken care of in lines 12 and 13, but I have had no answer why our Ambassadors to London, Paris, and Brussels are here in America while being paid $17,500 each to serve our country at their posts abroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I rise to make a few observations that I hope will be given consideration. I do not suppose anybody in this House fails to appreciate how important, how delicate, and how dangerous is this subject that we propose to deal with right now. This is one of the major diplomatic matters that this Government will be called upon to deal with perhaps in many, many years. If there ever was a time when American statesmanship ought to have its feet on the ground and its head on its shoulders it is right now. Insofar as I am concerned, I do not know how it is with the body of the membership of this House; I never heard of this proposition to sever diplomatic relationship with Russia until about 15 or 20 minutes ago. Just think of the spectacle of the great American House of Representatives passing on a question of this sort all "het" up and with their eyes shining. When people's eyes are shining it is no time to pass on great questions. Think of the speeches that we have listened to, undertaking to stampede this House now, in this critical hour of our Nation's life. Let me make you one or two suggestions, and you just think about them. I do not know so much about what is in the books. I know something about what the books are written about. I have observed life. I have observed the operation of the laws of cause and effect. The adoption of this resolution could not hurt Russia. Its reasonable and probable result would be to help Russia. You are familiar with the history of the French Revolution. Outside opposition was the most solidifying influence exercised upon the French people. We are supposed to be opposed to bolshevism in America. I ask you, out of your own experience, what is the most solidifying influence that can be exercised on any people? It is outside opposition. We are giving to these dictators in Europe what those dictators could not possibly command—outside opposition, the most solidifying influence that can be exerted on a divided people. Take the history of the French Revolution. I do not think anybody can study the French Revolution and not know that the thing that drove the French back upon themselves in solidarity and made it possible for them to fight the battles of the Revolution and carry them through the Napoleonic wars, and almost enabled them to whip the world, was the fact that as soon as they declared their Revolution, outside people began to attempt to influence the policy of France.

I do not think anybody can study the Russian revolution and fail to reach the conclusion that there was no force or influence within that country which could possibly have held together that divided people, of all races and religions and tongues, until they could have consolidated that revolution, except for the economic pressure which this country and other countries began immediately to bring to bear upon them. I am just talking common sense now. We are dealing with a practical matter.

I remember my grandfather told a story one time about a man going down the road and he saw a man and his wife fighting. He, the outsider, tried to intervene, and they turned on him and almost beat him to death. [Laughter.]

Do you want to know why we have got just one party in the South? Every time we show a disposition to split up, you Yankees threaten to do something to us, the cracks close up, and we have just one party. [Laughter.]

I am talking sense now. This is a practical proposition. If we want to help bolshevism, this is the way to do it, because we give their leaders all the excuse they will need for the failure of their policy. They say, "Look what those capitalistic nations are doing." They do not need any better excuse than that. All the excuse we have in the South is, "Look what those Yankees are trying to do to us," and we do not need any further argument. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I want you to think about this thing now. This is no small matter we are dealing with now. It does not fall within the group with reference to which partisan politics may be excused.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EATON. We all have the greatest affection and regard for the distinguished gentleman, but what is the logic of the position that the gentleman is now taking? It must be that the American people must draw themselves into a spiritual and intellectual vacuum and have nothing to say about what is going on in the rest of the world.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; it is not quite that. There is definite conflict between sentiment and judgment. When you get to a conflict between sentiment and judgment you are in a bad situation, and it is difficult to handle. I admit that sentiment is fine in its place, but whenever sentiment climbs up into the judgment seat and undertakes to determine policy, it is a mighty dangerous time for the people of the Nation. [Applause.] Sentiment performs a good office when it calls judgment to the judgment seat, but sentiment makes a bad mistake when it misunderstands its natural limitations and undertakes to speak the voice of judgment. Please think that over.

Mr. EATON. I would like to answer that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I will not let the gentleman answer that. I do not want the gentleman to spoil that good statement of mine.

I doubt that Hitler could have consolidated the revolution in Germany but for the solidifying help from outside opposition. That made it impossible for the opposition to him in Germany to do anything about it, speaking practically. In my view—and I mean no offense—this proceeding is the sort which cannot add anything to our diplomatic strength and certainly nothing to the confidence of the Nation in the fitness of the House of Representatives to guide and guard the interest of the Nation in this, one of the most tragic, dangerous periods in all the annals of time. It is a pitiable, pathetic thing. What do we propose to do? We propose to cut off the pay of a fellow we have got hired over there in Russia and think that is going to have something to do with the war. Now, Members of this House, do not do it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that cutting out the appropriation for our embassy to Russia at this time would be a roundabout, indirect manner of accomplishing what a great many people of the United States would like to have done. This is to give some substantial assistance to that heroic nation on the other side of the world—Finland—which has aroused the admiration of the entire American people by its splendid fight to maintain its national integrity against the onslaught of one of the most colossal nations of the world. Russia is attempting to invade Finland and subject it to its own desires in order to secure a base whereby they can disseminate their political propaganda throughout the world more easily.

I agree with the gentleman from California [Mr. Izac], when he stated that our frontier is on the Karelian Isthmus. It most certainly is and the sooner we recognize this fact the better. The war which is going on in Finland today is only a part of a general campaign which has been carried on by Soviet Russia to spread its political ideology all over the world. They have attempted to spread it in this Nation by every other means, except the force of arms. They are attempting to spread it in Finland by force of arms. If we are going to lend any assistance to this nation in its hour of need, this assistance must not only be timely, but it must also be substantial. All the statements that have been made that the neutrality act now on our books bars us from lending any assistance to Finland, are entirely erroneous. There is nothing in the neutrality act which would bar us from lending assistance to Finland. War has not been declared and the Russians themselves have announced that they are not waging war in Finland. They are merely going into Finland to the assistance of the People's Party. They, by their own admission, are not waging war. They are only engaged in a neighborly act of kindness. They have also announced to the League of Nations that they are going into Finland in order to prevent England and France from seizing a base in that territory. They have announced to their own people that they are engaged in defending Russia from Finnish invasion.

Now I submit to you that the situation in that part of the globe today is exactly this. Russia is going into Finland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. The Bear has his eyes fastened on that territory today as he has had for centuries. So if Norway, Sweden, and Denmark do not join Finland to beat Russia, they will be defeated in detail, and the only way they can effectively combat the threat of Russian invasion is to actually invade Russia. In no other way can the Scandinavian nations win the war. As soon as the weather becomes milder, the Russians can and will bomb every city, town, and village in Finland and reduce it to ruins. They will bring up the necessary heavy artillery tanks and transportation and force their way into Finland to actually occupy the territory and force the Finns into subjection. The small force of the Finns will fall from sheer exhaustion. Then the Russian hordes will sweep across the Scandinavian peninsula and also Denmark.

In order to win, the threatened nations must invade Russia and destroy the bases from which the bombing planes and armies are operating. This must be done either by land or air or by a combination of the two. Wars are not won by defensive operations. Effective combat of bombing planes can only be accomplished by operating against the bases from which they are serviced. If we are to furnish assistance to Finland, it must be substantial enough to enable them and those who must be their allies to wage the war as it must be waged to win. Any assistance short of this would be a mere gesture of friendship, foolish and futile. They too must understand that they cannot win unless they invade Russia and destroy the will of the Russians to wage war. This is not at all impossible because of the internal condition of Russia as regards transportation facilities and general morale.

I call the attention of the membership here this afternoon to the fact that we are not nearly so far away from this conflict as we might seem to be. Iceland is only a few hundred miles from that place, and Iceland is only a few hundred miles from North America. It is a direct link in the chain, and Russia has her eyes fastened on it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is there not a better way of doing what the gentleman and all America wants to do? That is to give the Finns all they need. Then they will take care of themselves. [Applause.]

Mr. FADDIS. That is exactly what I am trying to propose here this afternoon, that we adopt a common-sense practical way of assisting the Finns by giving them what they need to maintain their independence. By so doing we are also helping ourselves. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I want it distinctly understood that my attitude on this proposition is not prompted by any European war. I am looking at it from an American standpoint. I am opposed to any government that attempts to overthrow the Government of the United States, and I am for driving from American shores every influence that comes here and attempts to destroy my Government. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] overlooked one fact: Geographically, Russia is closer to us than any other European country, for she lies just across Bering Strait from Alaska.

Let me answer the distinguished gentleman from Texas. In the course of his remarks he spoke about the world's turning against France after communism had brought on the French Revolution, and about forcing the French to solidarity. What I am trying to do today is to bring some solidarity among the American people to fight communism and drive it out of this country. He talks about what they did to Germany. I will tell you what happened to Germany. The Communists flooded in there by the thousands, took control of Germany, destroyed the German Republic, and created Hitler. Do you want them to create a Hitler here? We are going to have to stop these communistic influences in the United States, and this is the only opportunity that I have had to vote to that effect.

I heard witnesses before the Dies committee. I heard a Negro testify that he had been sent to Russia and trained in the technique of revolution of waging war against the white people of the United States for the purpose of overthrowing this Government and waging war on the white people of the South. They have taken young white people, as well as Negroes, to Russia and trained them for that purpose in flagrant violation of the treaty by which we recognized the Soviet Union.

I am looking at this matter from an American standpoint, not from a Finnish standpoint, not from a German standpoint, not from an English standpoint, but from the standpoint of my own Government created by Washington, defended by Jackson, perpetuated by your people and mine; and I shall cast my vote at every opportunity presented on the floor of this House to drive these iniquitous influences from American soil. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that all of us here are speaking for America. Our opinions differ, but we are for America, and we ought not, any of us, to doubt the stand of any other Member of this body or of the American people on that subject. There is now pending a motion to recall the American Ambassador from Russia.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] set out the fundamentals of the history that all of us ought to know and observe under present conditions. It seems to me that if we only look closely and carefully at what is taking place in Europe we can defend and promulgate our Americanism to the very best possible advantage by recognizing our duty to the little Republic of Finland by supplying them with the things they need with which to defend themselves. Any man who knows the border between Russia and Finland will tell you that if they are supplied with arms, ammunition, and airplanes, which they have a perfect right to have from us under our Neutrality Law, they can defend that border until Russia will be thoroughly sick of the war that they are forcing upon that little nation, 40 Russians to 1 Finlander. It is a shameless scene, one that shocks every man with a drop of sporting blood in his veins and people all over the world. If those countries that we call civilized support the Finns only so far as to provide them with arms and munitions, Russia will break to pieces over this merciless, this brutal attack. That part of Russian ideology that ought to be eliminated from the world will be eliminated when the Russian people awaken to what the Stalin government is doing to Finland. Finland is giving to the world the best example of courage and manhood that has been seen in a hundred years. The people of America are abundantly able and abundantly willing to give to this people what they have got to have to defend themselves.

There is no danger in our being drawn into the war in doing this. Russia has not only not declared war on Finland, but denies that she is making war on Finland. There is nothing in our own neutrality law, under these circumstances, that at all limits our right to lend money or sell war equipment of all kinds to Finland. No reasoning American will deny these are our rights, and none but a "Mr. Milque-toast patriot" would fear to act on those rights.

That will do the thing we are all driving at.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does the gentleman know if the Secretary of State or the President is making any effort to get Russia to lay off of Finland?

Mr. KELLER. I do not know about that because I have not talked to them.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Does not the gentleman think they should do something about it?

Mr. KELLER. I think everything has been done that can be done and I think everything will continue to be done that it is possible to do. However, there is this delay which we have in our own body and in another body. We are talking a republic to death while a brave people are begging only for arms and equipment with which to defend their country and their lives.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. If they have done everything they could do, they have not done anything.

Mr. KELLER. They may not be able to do anything.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The administration is delaying action in the House.

Mr. KELLER. In relation to Finland?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. So far as helping Finland is concerned?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. I have not heard that.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman heard the President's message the other day?

Mr. KELLER. I did; but I did not get that from it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. That is what it said.

Mr. KELLER. That is not my opinion of what it said.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman feels that Russia is the aggressor in this matter?

Mr. KELLER. There is no question about that.

Mr. KEEFE. Is the gentleman aware of the fact, as reported in the press of a couple of days ago, that a thousand young people met in New York City to choose delegates to the American Youth Congress and passed a resolution condemning Finland for being the aggressor and accusing it of starting this war upon Soviet Russia?

Mr. KELLER. I regret to admit that there are likely even more than a thousand young jackasses loose in New York. I am glad the gentleman does not belong to them nor endorses what they are doing when they do things like that. I am as much for helping Finland as any man can be, and I am as much for giving them their chance to show up the shortcomings of Russia as any other man. Let us give them the money and give them airplanes. I repeat, we are under no obligation to withhold aid from Finland. There is no war. There is nothing in the neutrality law which will limit our Government so far as Finland is concerned. We should rise up and take action at the present time to give that little republic exactly what it needs. It will do the rest. You need not worry about that; it is not fighting its battles alone. Every man in those Scandinavian countries is on his tiptoes ready to help. In the next few weeks more than 50,000 men from Scandinavian countries, who know that climate, and are as good soldiers as there are in the world, will be helping Finland. We should give them ammunition and the equipment that men take with them into the defenses of that kind.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to make a speech at this point, but we have spent considerable time on this particular section, and there will be ample opportunity for debate as the bill is read. I am wondering if we cannot read the bill for a short while, then have the debate continue? We are anxious to finish up this bill tonight, if possible; however, I have no desire to shut off anyone who has a speech to make, but I thought these speeches might be made a little later.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask one other question of the gentleman from Illinois in order to follow through the thought that was expressed in the first question I put to him. It was reliably reported in the press that a group of about 1,000 young people met in New York to choose delegates to the American Youth Congress, which is meeting here in Washington. It was further reported that of this group only 5 voted against a series of resolutions which condemned Finland and gave support to Soviet Russia, thus very clearly demonstrating their interest and affection for the Soviet Government of Russia.

Mr. Chairman, the delegates from that meeting came to the meeting of the American Youth Congress; and appearing in the press this morning is this statement, headed:

MRS. ROOSEVELT DEFENDS COMMUNIST RIGHTS IN GROUP

A White House debate, in which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt defended inclusion of Communists in the American Youth Congress, was divulged yesterday on Capitol Hill.

Then follows the report of that meeting held at the White House, to which numerous Members of Congress were invited, and which they apparently attended, because Senator JOSH LEE is quoted in this article as being in absolute opposition to their arguments. Senator WHEELER, of Montana, is also quoted similarly as disagreeing with "Mme. President." The Senator, who is frequently mentioned as a possible Presidential candidate, said this:

Where will you get with conservatives if we liberals are opposed to you?

There is the picture. These people came down here from New York after attending a meeting such as I have described and are invited to attend a meeting at the White House where the rights of these young Communists are applauded as being part and parcel, and rightfully part and parcel, of the American Youth Congress. I want the spokesmen for the White House to know that so far as I am concerned I oppose vigorously, as did the representatives of this body and the Senate who attended that meeting, the inclusion of the Young Communists League as representative of the American youth of this Nation. When that matter comes before the House at a future time, I assure you I am going to present the result of a very long investigation on that subject.

I am in favor of the principles of the N. Y. A., but I want it sent out to the country today that there should not be any connection between the N. Y. A. and the American Youth Congress. Those who are purporting to speak as representatives of the American Youth Congress in support of the N. Y. A. had better keep their mouths closed, because they are serving to discredit that organization and its splendid work rather than doing it any good.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman read the resolution to which he referred as having been passed in New York?

Mr. KEEFE. No; I do not have that resolution here. Everybody here saw it in the press. It was published in the papers. I will get it and put it in the Record if the gentleman wants it.

Mr. KELLER. Yes; I should be very glad to have the gentleman do that. I should also like to make this remark—that if it misrepresents the sense of that meeting, as this newspaper article does the sense of the meeting at the White House, it does not carry very much weight.

Mr. KEEFE. I have no knowledge that the newspaper article misrepresents the sense of the meeting at the White House.

Mr. KELLER. It does.

Mr. KEEFE. I am informed that the press were barred from this meeting at the White House, and that what appeared in the press this morning was given to the press by those who attended as members of this conference.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to paraphrase a little the remark of the gentleman from Illinois—and I think he will agree with me and say that jackasses are welcome as members of this Youth Congress.

Mr. KELLER. I said that the gentleman was not guilty of being one.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to restrict unnecessarily the latitude of debate, but we are going to try to finish this bill today, and we should like to move along. I suggest that we read several sections before we have any further debate under pro forma amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to propound an inquiry to the members of the committee which has reported this bill. It seems that members of the committee in charge of the bill opposed the McCormack amendment on the ground that we should not recall our Ambassador from the Communist Soviet Union because we should retain him as our listening post in Moscow. What I want to find out is why this bill, as reported out, includes an annual appropriation of $17,500 for an Ambassador to the Government of Germany, notwithstanding the fact that the New Deal administration for many months has not seen fit to have an Ambassador in Berlin, Germany. I cannot understand why the New Deal administration finds it necessary to have an Ambassador in Communist Russia and unnecessary to have one in Germany.

Mr. CALDWELL. I may say to the gentleman that that is an administrative matter over which this committee has no control.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. This clearly indicates that the argument advanced in opposition to the McCormack amendment was not based on a sound principle. If it is necessary to maintain an Ambassador in the Communist Soviet Union in a listening-post capacity, it surely is just as essential to maintain an Ambassador in Germany for the same purpose.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard many eloquent talks today in favor of taking sides in foreign wars and furnishing sinews of war to one side at the expense of the almost bankrupt Treasury of the United States. We now have a national debt of more than $42,000,000,000. Our Federal Government for many years has been running several billion dollars in the "red" each year. In addition to our stupendous national debt of more than $42,000,000,000, we have about seven or eight billion dollars of obligations which have been guaranteed by our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury.

With more than 11,000,000 American people out of employment and our Government, in the name of economy, reducing expenditures for feeding our hungry unemployed Americans and reducing the expenditures for the relief of our distressed American farmers, it is absolutely un-American and indefensible to continue to play Santa Claus to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars for people in foreign lands. Are we going to our American people and point out that in the name of economy we reduced W. P. A. appropriations, we reduced essential appropriations for the relief of our distressed farmers and other distressed American citizens, in order to balance the Budget and be in a position to play Santa Claus in a big way and hand foreign nations many millions of dollars to carry on their wars? As sure as night follows day, as soon as we take sides and finance foreign wars it will not be long before American youth will again be slaughtered on foreign battlefields under the wave of propaganda which is now sweeping America as it did prior to our entering the last World War.

With reference to aid for Finland, if these multimillionaire newspaper owners—such as the owners of the Washington Star, Kaufman and Noyes, who have been demanding that we raid our almost bankrupt Federal Treasury to finance wars of foreign nations—are sincerely in favor of helping those foreign countries, why do they not raise a private fund and contribute a million dollars each and call upon their fellow multimillionaire propagandists who feel as they do to do likewise? They should then go to multimillionaire new dealers—who are as liberal with the American taxpayers' money as they are—and solicit a contribution of a million dollars from each of the hundred or more multimillionaire new dealers who are the main cogs of the New Deal political machine which plays Santa Claus to foreign countries in a big way, as the Democrats always do when they are in power. Let them go to Doris Duke and Jimmie Cromwell, who contributed $50,000 in order that he might be appointed Minister to Canada. Go to Barney Baruch, the multimillionaire New Deal unofficial president; go to President Roosevelt, Mr. Morgenthau, Mr. Edison, Harold Ickes, and the other 125 multimillionaire New Deal liberals, who are very liberal when it comes to spending other people's money.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this Congress will serve America. We are Members of the American Congress. Let us devote our best efforts and energies to the welfare of our own country and our countrymen. Let us keep out of foreign entanglements and stop playing Santa Claus in a big way to those in foreign lands, and stop financing their wars, particularly since our Federal Treasury is almost bankrupt. Furnishing dollars and other sinews of war to a nation engaged in war is not neutral. It is an act of war which will result in again sending our men to slaughter on foreign battlefields. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, on November 30, 1939, I addressed a letter to the President of the United States and also to the Secretary of State, requesting that the United States break off diplomatic relations with Russia in the best interests of the people of the United States of America, in order that we as a nation may not be placed in an embarrassing position with regard to any diplomatic relations with Russia, and I suggested that an order be issued recalling our Ambassador to Russia and that all diplomatic relations with Russia cease at that time.

Subsequent to this, on January 3, I introduced a bill calling for an authorization of a $60,000,000 loan to Finland for the general requirements of that Nation.

I fully realize that the breaking off of diplomatic relations with Russia would not lend material aid to Finland. Why do I say that we should give Finland material aid? Because of the fact that, if Russia should be able to crush Finland, she would then be in a position to move into the northern part of Europe. She would then be of some use to Germany and Hitler, and until she crushes Finland she will be of no use to Hitler or Germany. If she becomes of use to Hitler and Germany, and they join together and take over the Balkans and move to take over Norway and Sweden, a totalitarian government will reign throughout Europe. This type of government will be in complete control of Europe, and when they do, the very foundation of democracy in this country will be in danger.

If we give this aid to Finland, it is not going to be just an ordinary gift, it is going to be a loan, but at the same time it is going to be more than that. It is going to be an insurance policy to this Nation against the invasion of those godless elements in this Nation and the best insurance policy that we can have.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield.

Mr. SECCOMBE. I appreciate the gentleman's friendly sentiments toward Finland, but would the gentleman mind stating whether he received a letter in return to the one he sent the President?

Mr. HOOK. I received a letter in reply with the information that was presented on the floor today, that they needed a listening post in Russia, and that they would be in a better position to be able to sit in on a peace conference and aid Finland in that way and protect her if they had an Ambassador than if they did not have one.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOOK. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. There is a matter I think the gentleman might clear up, in view of the sentiment in this House in favor of a loan to Finland, which is a reflection, I think, of the sentiment all over the country, as to why no move in that direction has been made. The gentleman is aware, is he not, that the only reason the Foreign Affairs Committee has not gone ahead with the consideration of this bill is that that committee has 15 members of the majority party and 10 of the minority, and the President has not given the Democratic members of that committee a green light on the matter.

Mr. HOOK. I know nothing about that. I know nothing about any green light from the President. I do know the President and this administration will and are giving their support to aid to Finland. They will act as soon as the Ways and Means Committee brings out this bill before them.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman knows the President has not expressed his approval to the committee.

Mr. HOOK. I know the bill is not before the Foreign Affairs Committee; it is before the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. MOTT. Such a bill is before both committees.

Mr. HOOK. The bill I introduced provides for a $60,000,000 loan for the general requirements of that country, and can be made in accordance with ordinary channels of commerce between countries; and if we do not allow that, we are putting a premium on aggression.

Mr. MOTT. There is such a bill before both committees, I will inform the gentleman—the Ways and Means and Foreign Affairs.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Foreign Service buildings fund: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act of May 25, 1938, entitled "An act to provide additional funds for buildings for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States" (52 Stat. 441), including the initial alterations, repair, and furnishing of buildings acquired under said act, $300,000, to remain available until expended, and in addition the Secretary of State is authorized to enter into contracts for such purpose during the fiscal year 1941 in an amount of not to exceed $100,000: Provided, That whenever a contract is made for the construction, alteration, or repair of a Foreign Service building which requires payments in a foreign currency, the Secretary of State is authorized to purchase such currency at such times and in such amounts (within the total amount of the payments to be made under such contract) as he may deem necessary, the currency so purchased to be disbursed and accounted for at its cost price: Provided further, That this authorization shall also apply to the funds available to the Secretary of State under prior appropriations for the construction of Foreign Service buildings.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that there has been no debate on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'NEAL). To what paragraph does the request of the gentleman from Florida refer?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am agreeable to that request. I really rose, Mr. Chairman, to consume the time of the Committee, because I was looking for the gentleman from Massachusetts. I did not know the gentleman was here.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there has been no debate on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I took this time because in looking for the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack], who is to propose an amendment on the next page, I did not see him sitting here, and I took the time in order to protect his rights. As long as I have the time I shall use it to discuss the same subject that has been before the Committee—namely, the recognition of Soviet Russia. When Soviet Russia was recognized by the President of the United States certain very definite promises were made to the American people, and, as other speakers have already said, most of those promises have been repudiated. These Communists are the most skillful propagandists in the world, so when they wanted America to recognize Soviet Russia they dangled before the eyes of the American people, and particularly of big-business men and the international bankers in New York State, a great juicy bait, and said, "If you will recognize Soviet Russia, we will do $1,000,000,000 worth of business with you"; and the big bankers and the internationalists and the businessmen, and the industrialists all jumped on the band wagon for recognition. They then went down south into the Southern States, where cotton is king, and said, "If you will recognize Soviet Russia we will do $200,000,000 worth of cotton business with you; we will buy $200,000,000 worth of cotton from the Southern States"; and the good old Methodists and Baptists of the South, who hated Russia because the Soviets had denied and repudiated God and all religion and spread class hatred and world revolution—those good Baptists and Methodists, when the bait of $200,000,000 worth of cotton was dangled before their eyes, put aside their scruples and their consciences and also jumped on the band wagon and had their Senators and even their Representatives favor the recognition of Soviet Russia.

So this bait won over the international bankers and the industrialists of the North and the cotton people of the South, and then what happened? Recognition was granted, but instead of doing one billion worth of trade they did $25,000,000 worth of trade in a year, and under Republican administrations prior to recognition the facts will show that we did $100,000,000 worth of business with Soviet Russia. Since recognition we have done $25,000,000 worth of annual trade with Soviet Russia. Instead of buying $200,000,000 worth of cotton from the Southern States they bought, I think it was, three and a half million dollars worth of cotton, and they borrowed that money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to put over the deal. But the skillful propaganda, based on business hopes, appealed to the South and appealed to the Northern States, and the promise of an enormous amount of trade won over those who were in opposition to recognition. Now, after 7 years of complete failure to live up to any of their promises or pledges, particularly those promises for increased trade, is it not time for the Congress of the United States to act? I admit that this is not the proper procedure, far from it. There is not a Member on either side of the House who believes that this is the proper procedure, but it is the only chance we have. If we want to sever diplomatic relations, this is the only hope, the only way that we will ever have in this Congress to express our views and our sentiments and our solemn convictions. Is there anything wrong in Republicans or Democrats seizing this opportunity to express their views and the views of their constituents who want to sever diplomatic relations and have nothing to do with this country that denies God and spreads revolution all over the world, including the United States of America? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed 10 percent of any of the foregoing appropriations under the caption "Foreign intercourse" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, may be transferred, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to any other foregoing appropriation or appropriations under such caption for such fiscal year, but no appropriation shall be increased more than 10 percent thereby: Provided, That all such transfers and contemplated transfers shall be set forth in the Budget for the fiscal year 1942.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: Page 17, after line 14, insert: "Provided, That no appropriations contained under the caption 'Foreign intercourse' shall be used for the maintenance of an embassy of the United States in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or for salaries or any character of expense, other than salaries, for the maintenance of any office or officer of the United States State Department in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the vote taken on a similar proposition to this a short time ago was very close—105 to 108. I am serving notice now that if I can get the floor I shall move to recommit the bill, with instructions to report the bill back forthwith with the amendments adopted. The pending amendment brings flatly before the Committee again the question that I attempted to bring when I tried to have the three amendments considered together. If the chairman of the subcommittee had agreed to that, the debate would have been over and settled by the vote taken on the first occasion.

Mr. Chairman, the very fact that 105 Members in the Committee voted in favor of this proposition indicates a very strong feeling in support of the effort that I am making on this occasion. I dare say that of the 108 Members who voted against the proposition, every one is opposed to what Soviet Russia stands for.

However, I wonder if they realize they were not consulted when the Litvinov agreement was entered into. The question of the recognition of Soviet Russia was not submitted to the Senate of the United States. Now, when they talk about "sentimentality," they are rather inconsistent in their position, because we were not consulted on that occasion, and this is the only opportunity we have of acting in our own right in expressing our views and the views of our constituents on this important matter.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. No; I did not talk with Secretary Hull. [Laughter.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. That is what I wanted to ask the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know. I told the gentleman privately and the gentleman told me he was going to ask me the question. I anticipated it by telling the gentleman that I did not.

Mr. MASSINGALE. That is what the gentleman told me.

Mr. McCORMACK. Now, someone talks about being "taken off our feet by sentimentality." The sentiment is on the part of those who have a fear of communism, who have a fear of the Soviet Union. I hear some of them talk about Finland. I will vote for a loan to Finland without reservation. I will vote for a loan to Finland to buy munitions and implements of war. If we can loan money to Finland under the guise of Government credit for the purpose of buying agricultural products, we can make a loan to Finland for any purpose, without reservation.

We hear those who oppose the amendment talk that way, but certainly they did not vote the way they feel. They talk about Finland. If we took action today, it would be a message which would be chronicled throughout the world. It would do more to inspire the courageous people of Finland, short of other real material assistance, than anything this country could do.

Soviet Russia has broken every promise it has ever made. It never has kept a promise. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] that the Karelian Peninsula is the front-line trenches for western civilization. That is what I assume he had in mind. The Finns are making battle against those vicious forces that are not only desirous of conquest, but are determined to destroy the origin of western civilization—religion itself. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] made his statement, I assume that is what he had in mind. If so, I thoroughly agree with him.

Mr. FADDIS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. My good friend, the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, said if we wanted to help the Bolsheviks this was the way to do it. I respect my distinguished friend, but I remember when I was before the Committee on the Judiciary trying to get a bill out to make it a crime for "a person to knowingly and willfully advocate the overthrow of government by force and violence." I could not get it out of his committee. That amendment was put onto another bill last year, you will remember. I could not get it out of the Committee on the Judiciary to make it a crime for anyone "to knowingly and willfully advocate the overthrow of government by force or violence."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I did not ask for legislation confining it to "advocate." My bill provided that anyone who "knowingly or willfully advocated." What American can be opposed to that bill? Of course, the Committee on the Judiciary is composed of fine men and sincere, but I could not get that bill out of the Committee on the Judiciary. I wonder how some of my friends in the House on both sides feel when they realize that statement; and yet, when the amendment was offered in the House, it was overwhelmingly adopted. It reflected the sentiment of the Members of this House. It reflected the sentiment of the people of the United States.

There is no official diplomatic recognition of Russia. It is semidiplomatic, simply an exchange of letters, and it only exists by sufferance. The President can recall the Ambassador any time he wants to. This is not a question of whether there has been official recognition by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. KERR. Why did not the distinguished gentleman come before our committee and make a statement with respect to this legislation and sit down quietly and calmly with us and talk it over and see what could be done about it?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is a perfectly proper question. Of course, in the first place, I have a hesitancy about appearing before committees when all I know is what has been testified to after the hearings are over and printed. I recognize there might be some logic for that. But the Committee on Appropriations is not like any other committee. My experience is that they do not hold public hearings like any other committee.

Furthermore, a Member is not compelled to appear before a committee. A Member has his own rights as a Member of the House. To be frank with my friend, you know, and

I know, that if I appeared before the committee it would have been useless. The subcommittee would not have made any recommendation. I knew it had to be done by the House. The quicker our Ambassador is recalled from the Soviet Union, either by this action or by the President, the better for our country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of heat generated here on a question which I think is very important and which should be determined upon practical consideration of facts rather than prejudice or feeling. No Member of this House has any greater conviction of hostility against communism both here and abroad than myself. The question pending before us, however, is not whether communism is good or bad; not whether the United States acted wisely or unwisely in recognizing Russia; not whether Russia kept her promise or broke it; the sole question now to be considered is whether or not the severance of diplomatic relations at this time and the withdrawal of our Ambassador from Russia at this time will help or hurt the United States of America. [Applause.] Any other argument on any other line begs the question and is an appeal to passion and prejudice. I appeal to the House in passing upon this important question which affects not only our own country but Finland as well, to use our sound, sober judgment.

The chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bloom] is confined to his bed with illness and cannot be here. As a member of that committee I may say to the House that the question now pending is one to which I have given some thought and consideration. I am not acting upon impulse in what I say but upon an investigation of the facts with reference to the effect this resolution may have. I say candidly, and I say it with all the earnestness of my soul, that the adoption of the resolution to withdraw recognition of Russia and withdraw our Ambassador at this time will hurt the United States of America and will hurt Finland. [Applause.] If anybody challenges my statement, I would like to hear from him right now.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. Is the gentleman in favor of withdrawing our Ambassador from Germany?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. No; I am not, and we have not done so. We have not withdrawn our Ambassador from Germany. He is here on temporary leave.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Who is here on temporary leave from Germany?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Our Ambassador to Germany.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman mean our very able former Ambassador, Mr. Hugh Wilson.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand he resigned as Ambassador.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I am not sure about that, but I do know he came home on leave. At any rate, the Embassy in Germany is not vacant, and we have representatives in Germany now carrying on our Embassy in Berlin.

If we withdraw our representative from Russia, what do we do? What will it profit us and how will such an act benefit Finland? Our Embassy and Ambassador to Russia not only looks after the rights of American citizens but we are also enabled to get the facts as to what is happening there. When we had no representative in Russia our Government had to depend upon hearsay as to what was happening. One party would bring one report and another party a different report, and the State Department was in doubt as to the true condition of affairs in Russia. Now, with a war raging and with conditions as they are, more than ever before in our history do we need diplomatic representatives there; and we have as our Ambassador to Russia a very able man who, I am told by the State Department, is doing a splendid job in representing us and getting the facts and in looking after our interests.

It is important also that we maintain our Embassy in Russia so that this Government, having its representatives there, can get information and facts for our Government to use in its dealings not only with that country but other countries. So far as Finland is concerned, you are not helping Finland—you are not helping the United States at this critical time—by severing diplomatic relations or withdrawing our Ambassador.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Is it not a fact, since the gentleman and myself and most of us do not want to do anything that would be helpful to Russia, that the withdrawing of our Ambassador from Russia would be a blow at our own interests?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Absolutely. We would simply be making a gesture—a foolish gesture and a dangerous gesture—that would have no practical effect in the way of hurting Russia. We would be hurting only our own country, and we would be hurting Finland.

Do you think this is the place, do you think this is the forum, as an amendment to an appropriation bill to consider whether the relations of our Government should be severed, where the matter cannot be discussed, nor its significance, with all the facts, brought before the House? Do you think we should vote upon a matter of this kind when we do not know what the effect will be? I think I know what the effect will be, because I have investigated this question from every angle. Unlike my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], with whom I usually agree, I have been to the State Department and I have obtained information from sources which cannot be questioned outright. I am sure if some of the Members of the House had, they would not have voted as they did today, because the effect is going to be hurtful rather than helpful.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. EATON. I agree with my beloved colleague on the committee that this is probably not the best way to do it, but he made the statement that if this amendment is agreed to, it will injure the United States of America. I wish he would tell us in a few words exactly how that will be done.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. That is a very reasonable question. In the first place it will hurt us because we will have no diplomatic representative over there to look after our own citizens who may be there at this very critical time. It will hurt us also in that we will not know what is happening in Russia so that we can gage our conduct with Finland and other countries accordingly. In this grave crisis it is necessary that we find out all the facts we can at this time. In time of peace it may not be so important to have a representative, but in time of war when other countries are threatening and no one knows what will happen, it is highly important that we have our Ambassador there to get all of the facts, to determine our conduct and relations to Russia and the other countries of the world. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL]?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want 5 minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the very tense feeling that any Member of Congress or any American citizen might have over the situation that has been discussed here today. I do not believe anyone will accuse me of being particularly sympathetic with the Communists when they recall the fact that I have already been burned in effigy twice in public squares by the Communists in New York and some other places for the activities of the W. P. A. investigating committee in seeking to rid our relief rolls of Communists and their influence. It seems to me when we, sitting in the Committee of the Whole, more or less in an ex parte manner, by the control of small appropriation items, undertake to fix or seriously influence the foreign policy of our country, we are getting into very deep water and on very dangerous ground.

I heard some gentlemen here today advocating this drastic and significant action who on other occasions were inveighing against alleged tactics by the administration which they claim were seeking to put America into war; yet I cannot think of anything that the Congress could do; I do not know of any way we could commit a greater affront to a nation that as a power at present is on friendly relations with America, than by the action which is proposed here in this amendment.

If the question in issue here were whether or not America would recognize Russia, then I nor any of my colleagues would have any difficulty in voting on the question. Of course, you would not recognize it. The attitude of that Communist country, the manner in which it has persecuted all religious denominations, the manner in which it has ground down its own citizens and taken their rights away from them, the outrageous invasion of Finland, and all of its other acts are repulsive to every impulse of liberty and freedom that any red blooded American citizen could have, yet there is a proper time and place in which to fix the important foreign policies of our country, and this is not the time nor the place. Whatever may be our attitude toward some policies of the present administration, I believe the one man who has handled his job above reproach is Cordell Hull. In a most critical period, fraught with grave danger, he has done a magnificent job in handling the foreign affairs of this country [applause], and it seems to me that the action which we are proposing here today in withholding a small appropriation for the Embassy at Moscow is most untimely, and impugns the administration of our Secretary of State. I want to plead with the House of Representatives not to take snap judgment on this matter. It is not a question whether we approve or disapprove of Russia's invasion of Finland. Of course we do not. There would not be a vote in this body to approve of that. As has been pointed out, the suggested action would in nowise aid Finland or injure Russia. There is a proper time, a proper place, and a proper forum under our system of government in which these matters of foreign policy are determined and handled, and not collaterally by taking out a small item of an appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, I very much hope that this amendment and any other similar amendment will not be accepted by the Committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER].

RECOGNITION OF RUSSIA

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the tribute paid by the gentleman to the administration of the Department of the Secretary of State, but I believe we should also be informed whether or not it is a fact that the files of that Department will show that every one of our representatives in Europe concerned with the Russian situation immediately prior to its recognition recommended against recognition of Russia at that time. If that is a fact it seems to me it has a very material bearing upon the policy with which we are here concerned. I say this because the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the gentleman from Texas and others, are doubtless accorded the privilege of knowing what were the reports of our representatives on the borders of Russia immediately prior to our recognition of this regime.

RUSSIAN GOLD

I want to address myself more specifically, however, to the theory of the listening post in Russia. We have been hearing a great deal recently about the matter of Russian gold. The Secretary of the Treasury states that he does not know and is utterly unable to find out how much Russian gold is being produced or what is its distribution. I want to suggest that if our Ambassador in Russia is not able to learn these facts there is within the bounds of the United States now a gentleman who for 9 long years up to 1939 was in charge of all Soviet gold production.

Why is this a matter of concern? If it be a fact that this Government has taken $1,000,000,000 of Russian gold in the last 5 years, as is by many asserted, it means that we have not only given that amount of exchange to Russia but we have given the Soviet Government a profit of hundreds of millions of dollars. It is estimated that Russian gold may be produced in vast quantities for less than $15 an ounce. Yet we pay $35 an ounce for every ounce shipped to our shores from anywhere in the world. This means that in buying $1,000,000,000 in gold the United States gives Russia a profit of approximately $600,000,000 for gold that probably could not be sold elsewhere—certainly not at any such price.

JOHN D. LITTLEPAGE

John D. Littlepage is the name of the gentleman to whom I refer, whose book, In Search of Soviet Gold, reveals the most intimate knowledge of gold production in Russia throughout the last decade.

It is no answer to the suggestion that America has been financing Russia through this period to support this communistic regime to say that all the gold in our Treasury is stamped with the mark of Britain, France, or the Netherlands. This may simply mean that Europe has sold us a billion dollars' worth of European gold and replaced that gold with a billion dollars of gold from Russia, to maintain Europe as the international gold broker, which in my judgment is actually the fact.

Mr. Littlepage sought to discover why Russia did not increase its production of gold. He was told by an international authority on finance, as he reveals in the book to which I have referred, that Russia did not dump more gold on the world market because Europe thought the United States was now taking about its limit, and they did not wish to kill this golden goose. These international gold buccaneers have dumped gold on our country until we now have 65 percent of all the gold to be found in all the world.

I would suggest that the Secretary of the Treasury seek out Mr. Littlepage to tell us a few elemental facts about Russian gold production and distribution, since our Embassy seems unable to ferret out the truth.

I would not say that our novel gold policy was designed to bolster the tottering economy of Communist Russia. That, however, has been one of its unfortunate effects. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE].

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I was quite a bit surprised at the vote on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], whom I admire very much. Since the beginning of the debate on this amendment the gentleman from Massachusetts has very frankly told us that he has not consulted Secretary of State Hull about this matter at all. With that frank statement it is impossible for me to conceive why any man, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, would want to commit this Congress upon so important a matter without even consulting the man who is charged with the responsibility of handling that Department of the Government of the United States.

I can say one thing, however. We have a gentleman on the Republican side who seems to act as the minority Secretary of State. He never misses an opportunity to get up here and say something about the foreign policy of the United States.

Even between sessions of the Congress he makes trips across the ocean and when he gets there rides in airplanes to the various countries that are at war or about to get into war, and then comes back here and announces what the foreign policy of the Government of the United States ought to be.

At one time I believe I spoke of the gentleman—and I have a very high regard for him—as a Secretary of State in waiting. If he is not that, I do not know how to describe him. He is not satisfied with Secretary Hull's administration of the foreign policy of this Government. I hope he will be patient enough, at least, not to unhorse Mr. Hull now, but will wait until after the November elections, when perhaps he may realize that long-nursed ambition of his to direct the foreign affairs of this country.

As I stated a while ago, it seems quite absurd for this Congress to adopt this amendment, notwithstanding the very high regard and affection we all have for the author of the amendment. It is just too dangerous for us to be fiddling with an action such as this without some advice from someone who is responsible to this Government and knows what ought to be done about it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I was greatly interested in the statement of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], that if we had a chance to vote at this moment on the question whether or not we should recognize Russia, there would be no question about the result of the vote. That statement has gone forth to the administration, that without question this House would go on record, if they had a chance to vote on the question properly, that we would not approve recognition of Russia. Therefore, his argument seems to be that it will be too bad to deprive our Ambassador of his salary. This is the one forum we have for expressing ourselves on these matters, so what harm is there, even in this back-handed way, in our taking this action? If we had an opportunity to vote on the question directly, the gentleman says we would express ourselves as against it. Then why not do it this way? I doubt very much if that gentleman over in Russia finds out anything the Russian Government does not want him to know.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the Ambassador in Russia is so necessary or essential or valuable, or is doing such a good job, why was it impossible for the commander of the City of Flint to contact him at the time his ship was tied up in the harbor at Murmansk?

Mr. GIFFORD. I believe everybody understands that our Ambassador to Russia finds out nothing that the Russian Government does not care for him to know. They are undoubtedly making a mountebank of him.

The point I wish to make, however, is that this is the only way we have of expressing ourselves. I have no hesitation in saying that if all it amounts to is refusing the salary of that gentleman, let us do it. I might remind the House that if we vote it out, we do the job. If we wanted to let him stay there at his own expense, we probably could not accept his services. I do not know but that probably some of you might want to vote to leave $1 in this appropriation in order to make him a dollar-a-year man, so that he can represent us legally if he stays there.

A gentleman who preceded me said they could not find out how much gold Russia had imported. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve say we have not bought an ounce of gold as such, but we have only taken it in ordinary business transactions. Indirectly we have taken the gold; everybody knows that. Russia can buy our securities and then sell them the next day and take our good dollars for them. We do not have to buy gold as such from Russia. It is difficult, you know, to listen to explanatory speeches founded on simple facts from the Federal Reserve and from the administration. We have to look into them very carefully and learn the indirect results obtained. Of course, Russian gold indirectly has found its way here, and we have helped finance her war in Finland.

I am not afraid. I want to extend help to Finland. I am ready to vote direct aid. I repeat what I once quoted here not long ago in the words of Daniel Webster:

Three thousand miles of ocean roll between; we are safe; but we belong to the family of nations.

Can we not at least protest? If my vote here today could only be interpreted, I would like to have you interpret it as "Hurrah for Finland!"

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Does not the gentleman think that even before we withdraw the money for the Ambassador to Russia we ought to withdraw the money for the Ambassador to Berlin, who is not even serving.

Mr. GIFFORD. Well, we cannot explain that situation. To fully comment on the many peculiar actions of this administration would take a long time. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure if we were taking a poll expressing opposition of Congress to bolshevism or communism, it would be practically unanimous, but, unfortunately, this legislation does not permit of such a poll today.

I cannot help but think of the inconsistency of the arguments we are making today compared with those we were making less than 6 months ago, when discussing the neutrality bill. The gentleman who preceded me referred to the withdrawal of our Ambassador from Russia, and a number of others have expressed their individual opinions about the matter. If it were left to me personally, I would not have had any Ambassador in Russia to begin with, but that is a matter heretofore left with our President or State Department, and while I recognize we have the right to make or refuse to make an appropriation for such a diplomatic post, I think it is nothing short of our duty that we try to maintain friendly relations with all nations.

Less than 6 months ago men stood in this Chamber here and pleaded, with tears in their eyes as big as little apples, for the passage of a neutrality law in order to keep this country out of war. They were pleading in response to the will and desires of the American people that this country should take no action that would involve us in a foreign war; and yet we hear some of these same gentlemen here today—the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], for instance—rising on the floor of this House and saying that he is now willing to vote to supply and send arms and munitions of war to Finland, a country that is already in war. There is no doubt but that such action would be a flagrant breach of our neutrality law, which he so ably defended and supported last year. In other words, he is willing, by his statement and actions today, to take the first step that will inevitably lead us into a foreign war. I would not dare question his motives, but when he speaks of sending arms and munitions to a country already in war, which would be in violation of our neutrality law, I cannot overlook the fact that he comes from a State in which there are large shipbuilding interests and many munitions plants.

I have unbounded sympathy for Finland, and I have no sympathy whatever with the Government of Soviet Russia or any of its social or governmental teachings or institutions. As a matter of fact, I would personally like to see every vestige of communism or Russianism wiped off the face of the earth, but I am not willing at this time to take an unprovoked action that may involve us in war and require us to send millions of young men into a foreign country and sacrifice their lives simply to satisfy my personal likes or dislikes. There can be no doubt but that the passage of this amendment will be a reflection and an insult to Russia. As I have already stated, I hold no brief for Russia; I have no sympathy whatever for Russia or any of its institutions; but

I know that one of the easiest ways in the world to get into a fight is to slap an enemy in the face.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARE. Yes.

Mr. CREAL. Does the gentleman recall, when the same gentleman from Massachusetts made his speech last year on the neutrality bill, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] said, "That is the most warlike speech we have had since the World War"?

Mr. HARE. I do not recall the exact language, but I do know the two gentlemen referred to were then on opposite sides of the neutrality question, and the gentleman's observation is just another concrete illustration of the inconsistency of their actions here today.

We cannot fool the American people about getting into war. They want this country to stay out of any and all foreign wars, and they do not want this Congress to go around with a chip on its shoulder giving dares to people simply because we do not like the way they do things. Sooner or later it will get you into trouble. To withdraw diplomatic relations with Russia now simply because we do not approve of her form of government or the way she acts toward other nations—we would for the same reason be compelled to withdraw diplomatic relations with Germany, Japan, and other foreign countries, which we know sooner or later will mean war for us. Of course, if there is anything to be gained, I would readily be willing to cut out this appropriation of $17,500, but I am not willing to take the chance of becoming involved in a foreign war on account of so little an amount of money. That is, I am not willing to take the chance of sending the young men from my district to a foreign war for the pitiful sum of $17,500, which is the amount involved in this amendment. It is not worth the sacrifice of the life of even one man.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago, when the gentleman from California [Mr. IZAC] stated that he favored the extension of loans to Finland for the purpose of purchasing military supplies, I interrogated him and asked whether he thought it would not be more effective to send American youth to help Finland fight against the onslaughts of the Russian armies. I did not propound that question because I was in favor of that step, and I want it distinctly understood at this time that I am opposed to extending aid to Finland for the purchase of military supplies, because I believe to do so would be an unneutral position and would ultimately lead to our involvement in the war which is now raging in northern Europe.

I voted against the McCormack amendment because I believed that to take such action at this time, to withdraw our diplomatic representative from Russia, would be an unneutral act, and I am opposed to doing anything at this time which is inconsistent with the neutrality policy which was adopted by Congress during the special session.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Is not the breaking off of diplomatic relations the first step toward war?

Mr. DWORSHAK. Whether it is or not, I am opposed to breaking off diplomatic relations with any country at this time, believing that the United States should take a distinctly neutral position and not become involved or influenced in any way by our emotions or sympathies.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to call the attention of Members here to history. There was probably no more bloody revolution in recent times than the French Revolution, and yet within 3 weeks, I believe it was, at least it was only a few weeks, Washington and Jefferson, two men we highly regard in the United States today, recognized the Republic of France. Why? Because it was a de facto government. By recognizing a government you do not thereby approve what they do or what they stand for. You simply say that that is a de facto government, and therefore that we recognize it. We recognized the czarist regimes for decades. Did we thereby approve what the czars stood for? Of course not. Now, if we are going to sever diplomatic relations with Russia, it must follow that we must also sever diplomatic relations with Germany; but I do not hear these gentlemen from Wisconsin or my good friend from New York [Mr. FISH] who rode in von Ribbentrop's airplane saying that we should sever relations with them, and yet the Hitler government denies God. Hitler has abused us and denounced democracy. When he raped Poland and laid it waste, did these gentlemen take the floor to denounce him? Then we must also sever relations with Italy. When Mussolini ravaged Abyssinia, did these gentlemen arise to protest? The Governments of Russia, Italy, and Germany are all alike, and we must treat them all in the same manner.

Mr. FISH rose.

Mr. HILL. I have not the time. Because Germany and Italy have done the same as Russia, and we have the same thing against Germany and Italy that we have against Russia. I cannot yield. In conclusion may I read from two esteemed gentlemen. I am not very much of an admirer of the great Al Smith, but at least you cannot call him a Bolshevik or say he favors communism. On page 1543 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 12, 1933, he is quoted by Senator Borah in this manner:

Russian propaganda in this and other countries is also offered as a reason against recognition. I don't know how widespread Russian propaganda is, and I don't believe anyone else knows. In fact, there is considerable doubt as to whether the Russian Government actually is attempting to undermine other governments. If so, I am not afraid of what it will accomplish here.

And then to my Republican friends I quote from that distinguished statesman whose keen mind and unquestioned integrity we all honored and whose funeral I had the honor of attending in Boise. Senator Borah, who was chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, had this to say:

If I did not believe in the intelligence and the patriotism of the people of the United States, I might be afraid that they would be misled by propaganda of that kind; but as I do believe in their intelligence and patriotism I have no such fear whatever. I am not willing to base our foreign policies upon the theory that our own people are weaklings, susceptible to every intellectual wind that blows.

May I say, my good friends, that if we in this country set our house in order and solve the farm problem and the unemployment problem, bolshevism and nazi-ism and fascism can get no hold in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the gentleman who just spoke wants it to go into the RECORD that the German people are antigod, and I do not believe any other Member of Congress believes that the German people have repudiated God; and if that is what he said, and he wants to keep it in the RECORD, it is his privilege to do so, but I am sure that that is not what he meant.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman deny that Hitler denies God and religion?

Mr. FISH. I never had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Hitler or discussing religion with him. I am talking about the German people and that is what the gentleman said. The German people believe in God just as much as the gentleman does, just as much as the American people believe in God. It is an entirely different thing, recognizing Russia that has repudiated God and all religion and teaches hatred of God and all religion, and Germany.

Mr. HILL. The Russian people have not.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman will find out about the Germans, and what they think in America, the people of German origin, as to whether they believe in God, and whether they think their relatives believe in God.

I never have defended Hitlerism. I was the one who introduced the first resolution against the persecution of the Jews by Hitler. I never, never said that I was in favor of Hitler or any foreign dictatorship, and I want that to go into the RECORD. I never defended any foreign dictatorship—never. I am more against dictatorships than any man in the House, and I am just as much against dictatorship at home. [Applause.] I am against a dictatorship in Russia the same as I am in Germany or in the United States. It is none of our business what form of government exists in Germany or Russia, but very much our business that there is no kind of dictatorship in our own country.

I am getting a little tired of these references to "rides in airplanes," when even Prime Minister Chamberlain, Premier Mussolini, and others rode in the same airplane, and an American Congressman cannot travel in the plane of the German Foreign Minister without having his patriotism and Americanism impugned. I do not know what the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HILL] did in the World War, either. [Laughter.]

This question of recognition of Soviet Russia is no new matter. It was an international lie from the beginning. It was when we recognized Soviet Russia. It is still, and it will continue to be as long as the Communists are in control of Soviet Russia. As I have said, it is none of our business what form of government they have in Soviet Russia or in Nazi Germany or in Fascist Italy, and it is none of their business what form of government we have in the United States of America; but it is our business when foreign nations, like Communist Russia, interfere with our free institutions and republican form of government. It then becomes very much our business to prevent the spread of communism in our own country, and we intend to make it our business, and on every opportunity I have to sever diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia on that ground alone I propose to take it. The opportunity is here in the House of Representatives. Have we got the courage to take it or will we say, "Wait until some other time," as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] said. "This is not the time. This may be harmful to us." What good is an Ambassador in Soviet Russia? What good was our Ambassador when the City of Flint was seized? He could not even communicate with the captain of the City of Flint, who was at Murmansk for a week. What good is an Ambassador there? What does he know about the production of gold in Soviet Russia and the sale of gold to us at twice or three times the cost of production? It has been said it would be harmful to Finland. How in the world could it be harmful to Finland to repudiate Soviet Russia now? That is what I want to know. That is what the American people have a right to know. If you send out word that the majority of this House has voted to sever diplomatic relations with Soviet Russia, nothing could help Finland more in its fight for independence and liberty and encourage them to continue their battle for democracy and Christianity.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think, if it should go out that this Congress voted unanimously, after this question came up, much as we deprecate the fact that it has come up in this way, but if it should go out that we voted unanimously against this amendment, every newspaper in Russia will say that we had endorsed and recognized and approved the Russian policy?

Mr. FISH. Certainly. It is too bad it has come up now, because if it is voted down that will be the effect in spite of the fact that 90 percent of the American people want to have nothing to do with Soviet Russia.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to appear on the floor so frequently. When you listen to one of these calm, deliberate speeches like we have just listened to from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] [laughter], and see and appreciate that the statesmen of a great Republic have assembled deliberately to consider a major matter such as we are now considering, and then when a fellow makes a fiery speech like I am making, it is just out of order. [Laughter.]

This is one of the most remarkable proceedings I have observed since I have been a Member of this House. On the spur of the moment, by an amendment to an appropriation bill, with reference to which no prior notice has been given, it is proposed, in effect, to sever diplomatic relations with Russia. Now, what do you propose to do? We have a lot of talk about bolshevist and Finland. I have not heard anybody here get down to cases and state what benefit is going to come to any of the countries with whom we sympathize as a result of the action here proposed, or what harm is going to come to Russia if this amendment is adopted. Our Secretary of State, our diplomatic agent, struggling with all the involved diplomatic problems arising out of many nations at war, is not even consulted. Just think about that for a minute—grown people charged with a great responsibility actually proposing to do this thing. I am very certain that the only benefit that will come to anybody will come to Russia if we should pass this amendment. We are not going to do anything to them, but the Russian leaders would immediately be able to appeal to their people that they should stand together, because this great Government is undertaking to run the business of Russia. Can anybody overestimate the benefit of such an appeal? Suppose this were reversed, what would our reaction be? This is one of the most remarkable situations I have ever seen. Here we have a system of three coordinate branches of the Government. We have a man—Cordell Hull—employed by those people to have responsibility, in the first instance, for taking care of our diplomatic arrangements. I am not going to embarrass the people who have been voting to take this control away in the first instance by asking how many of them have sat down in calm, deliberate discussion with Cordell Hull and suggested to him that this thing should be done. I venture the statement that there is nobody, and if there is anybody, I will yield for him to stand in his place and say so. I will not exclude my distinguished friend who is a candidate for the Presidency of the United States on the Republican ticket. I yield to him to state that he went up there to the Department of State and gave his views to the Secretary of State that this thing ought to be done.

We are saying to the world today, at a time when Cordell Hull is the only person in the first instance to handle the diplomatic relationships of this country, that we are undertaking to take that responsibility away from the Department of State in the first instance; that we have no confidence in the Secretary of State. The only thing we do is to weaken the hands of the Secretary of State in undertaking to deal with the difficult and dangerous problems of this country at this moment. I will venture that you cannot find in the history of this country anything comparable to what is taking place in this Chamber right now.

Mr. BREWSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would the gentleman inform us where Secretary Hull was when the arrangement was made for recognition of Russia?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Unfortunately, I do not follow him around all of the time. I do most of the time, but that was one time when I was not on the job.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the gentleman recall that Secretary Hull sailed for South America and the President himself made the arrangements with Litvinov after Hull had departed.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not know where he was. One very significant thing about this whole matter apparent to me and to everybody else is that somehow or other on the Republican side you followed a little too regularly a certain gentleman from Massachusetts on this thing. It looks a little like politics, and this is a mighty poor time and place to be playing it.

Mr. JOHNS. Rubber stamps?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I would not say rubber stamps.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with my colleague from Texas that this is an amazing situation. There never has been a time in my 27 years of service in this House, it matters not who was the President of the United States or who was Secretary of State, when in a proceeding like this I would have voted to abrogate the ancient and fundamental policy of the Government of the United States in foreign affairs.

The outcome of the question now before us cannot be put upon the ground of what we think about Russia, what we think about the form of government in Russia, or what Russia has done to the little democracy of Finland. This action here today will not help Finland. This action here today will not hurt Russia. Let me repeat what was so well said by my colleague from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], that this action will make a more determined and a more resistless Russia to go about doing more of the things she should not do.

Are we, the Congress of the United States, going to sever diplomatic relations by an amendment like this with every country on the face of the earth with whose form of government we do not agree? Do you endorse the Government of Japan? Do you endorse in toto the government in Italy, or in Germany, or in a dozen other countries throughout the length and breadth of the world? Whether or not some people wanted the United States to resume diplomatic relations with Russia, it has been done, and done by the people who had the authority to do it.

It is dangerous ground, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, upon which we tread today. The international situation is tense, and I was so impressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MASSINGALE], buttressed by the remarks of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]. Is there a man in this House who has spoken in favor of this amendment, or who intends to vote for it, who has given the Secretary of State the privilege, the poor privilege, of talking to him or her about not only the Russian situation but the situation in other parts of the earth and with other countries?

I do plead with my colleagues at this hour: Be mighty careful, it is a dangerous situation that faces the whole earth. Let us, therefore, not do a thing here in passion and lack of reason that might embarrass this country beyond the poor limits of the patience and fortitude of the people of the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, all I care to say about this amendment is that now we have mauled it around, knocked it about, and played politics with it we ought to do the sensible thing and vote it down. No one has offered a single reason why it should be approved. No one has pointed to a single benefit which will accrue to this country if it be adopted. There must be a limit beyond which prejudice and politics cannot go.

I urge the defeat of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McCORMACK) there were—ayes 38, noes 95.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of the annual contributions, quotas, and expenses, including loss by exchange in discharge of the obligations of the United States in connection with international commissions, congresses, bureaus, and other objects, in not to exceed the respective amounts, as follows: Cape Spartel and Tangier Light, coast of Morocco, $1,176; International Bureau of Weights and Measures, $4,342.50; International Bureau of Publication of Customs Tariffs, $1,318.77; Pan American Union, $239,458.70, including not to exceed $20,000 for printing and binding; International Bureau of Permanent Court of Arbitration, $1,722.57; Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration, $20,000, including not to exceed $10,000 for the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic reporting services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), traveling expenses, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, maps, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, and other necessary expenses to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the president and executive secretary of the American group; International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, Italy, $48,756, including not to exceed $11,700 for the salary of the American member of the permanent committee (at not more than $7,500 per annum), compensation of subordinate employees without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, expenses for the maintenance of the office at Rome, including purchase of necessary books, maps, documents, and newspapers and periodicals (foreign and domestic), printing and binding, allowances for living quarters, including heat, fuel, and light, as authorized by the act approved June 26, 1930 (5 U. S. C. 118a), for the use of the American member of the permanent committee, and traveling and other necessary expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State; Pan-American Sanitary Bureau, $58,522.75; International Office of Public Health, $3,015.63; Bureau of International Telecommunication Union, Radio Section, $5,790; Inter-American Radio Office, $3,655; Government of Panama, $430,000; International Hydrographic Bureau, $5,404; Inter-American Trade-Mark Bureau, $14,330.20; International Bureau for Protection of Industrial Property, $1,471.63; Gorgas Memorial Laboratory, $50,000; Provided, That hereafter, notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of the act of May 7, 1928 (45 Stat. 491), the report of the operation and work of the laboratory, including the statement of the receipts and expenditures, shall be made to Congress during the first week of each regular session thereof, such a report to cover a fiscal year period ending on June 30 of the calendar year immediately preceding the convening of each such session; American International Institute for the Protection of Childhood, $2,000; International Statistical Bureau at The Hague, $2,000; International Map of the World on the Millionth Scale, $50; International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts, $6,745, including not to exceed $6,500 for the expenses of participation by the Government of the United States in the meetings of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts and of the commissions established by that committee, including traveling expenses, personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), rent, purchase of necessary books, and documents, printing and binding, official cards, entertainment, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State; Convention Relating to Liquor Traffic in Africa, $55; International Penal and Penitentiary Commission, $4,332, including not to exceed $800 for the necessary expenses of the Commissioner to represent the United States on the Commission at its annual meetings, personal services without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, printing and binding, traveling expenses, and such other expenses as the Secretary of State may deem necessary; Permanent Association of International Road Congresses, $588; International Labor Organization, $163,511.64, including not to exceed $5,901 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the meetings of the general conference and of the governing body of the International Labor Office and in such regional, industrial, or other special meetings as may be duly called by such governing body, including personal services, without reference to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, stenographic reporting and translating services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5), rent, traveling expenses, purchase of books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and charts, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State; Implementing the Narcotics Convention of 1931, $10,551.85; International Council of Scientific Unions and Associated Unions, as follows: International Council of Scientific Unions, $19.30; International Astronomical Union, $617.60; International Union of Chemistry, $675; International Union of Geodesy and Geophysics, $2,316; International Scientific Radio Union, $232.40; International Union of Physics, $62.72; International Geographical Union, $125.44; and International Union of Biological Sciences, $154.40; in all, $4,202.86; and Pan American Institute of Geography and History, $10,000; in all, $1,093,000, together with such additional sums, due to increase in rates of exchange as the Secretary of State may determine and certify to the Secretary of the Treasury to be necessary to pay, in foreign currencies, the quotas and contributions required by the several treaties, conventions, or laws establishing the amount of the obligation.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language beginning in line 20, page 20, "International Labor Organization, $163,511.64" and ending on page 21, line 11, with the words "Secretary of State" on the ground there is legislation contained in lines 1, 2, 5, and 10.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I have an additional point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that points of order be taken up separately.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve another point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language beginning with the word "Bureau", line 2, page 18, and ending with the word "group" in line 15, page 18.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the Chair tell us what point of order is before us at the moment?

The CHAIRMAN. There are two points of order pending. The gentleman from South Dakota raises a point of order against the language beginning in line 20, page 20, and ending with line 11, page 21.

The gentleman from New York raises an additional point of order against the language beginning in line 2, page 18, down to and including line 15, ending with the word "group."

Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I do.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I think legislation is clearly included in the lines I cited.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard?

Mr. CALDWELL. May I ask that we take up the points of order one at a time?

The CHAIRMAN. We will take up the first point of order raised by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that here is legislation in an appropriation bill. The language provides that certain things shall be done "without reference to the Classification Act" and certain other things shall be done "without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes," and it also includes this language: "And such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State," all of which is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CALDWELL. I think undoubtedly some of the language in that section is subject to a point of order. I am wondering if the gentleman would object to the elimination of the objectionable language.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against all of the language in the portion of the bill cited. From what I have heard of this particular item, under the appropriation made last year, as many as four trips to Europe were made, and other things done which seem of questionable justification. Consequently, I am constrained to make the point of order to include the appropriation itself.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida desire to be heard further?

Mr. CALDWELL. Undoubtedly a portion of the language is subject to a point of order, but I think the purpose can only be accomplished by the inclusion of that language. I certainly cannot object to sustaining the point of order on the ground suggested by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] on his point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language I previously referred to on the ground it is legislation in an appropriation bill and covers items not authorized by law.

Mr. CALDWELL. Would the gentleman have any objection to eliminating the language complained of, which is subject to a point of order, and retention of the substance of that section?

Mr. TABER. I cannot agree to that because I do not believe the language I have included within the point of order serves a useful purpose. I believe that the Bureau of Inter-parliamentary Union should be done away with. It is not justified, and we should not in these days when economy is necessary have the item in the bill. I believe the House ought to vote on it separately if we are going to have it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask that the point of order be again stated to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] makes a point of order against the language beginning in line 2, page 18, down to and including the words "American group," in line 15.

Mr. TABER. All of the language between those two points.

Mr. CALDWELL. Undoubtedly some of that language is subject to a point of order, and I cannot object to the Chair sustaining the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an authorization in there, but there is also legislation in an appropriation bill. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, the language of which will take the place of that stricken out on the point of order raised by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 20, line 20, after the figures "$588" and the semicolon add the following: "International Labor Organization $163,511.64, including not to exceed $5,901 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the meetings of the general conference and of the governing body of the International Labor Office and in such regional, industrial, or other special meetings as may be duly called by such governing body, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, rent, traveling expenses, purchase of books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and charts, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, hire, maintenance and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such other expenses as may be necessary."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it contains items that are not included in authorizations of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the language of the amendment I have proposed follows the purpose of the act of June 19, 1934, which provides as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to accept membership for the Government of the United States of America in the International Labor Organization, which, through its general conference of representatives of its members and through its International Labor Office, collects information concerning labor throughout the world and prepares international conventions for the consideration of member governments with a view to improving conditions of labor.

The powers included in the proposal are all necessary and incident to the authority granted by the act referred to. Our membership in the organization cannot be properly accomplished except under the authority conveyed by that language.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any authorization for entertainment in the act to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. CALDWELL. I believe it is perfectly obvious, Mr. Chairman, that entertainment is a necessary incident to the carrying out of the purposes of the act. Considering the objective desired to be attained and the purpose of the passage of the legislation, I think it must be admitted that our participation in the conference cannot be successful without it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to give a liberal interpretation to the act referred to by the gentleman from Florida, but within such a liberal interpretation the Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order on the ground that an appropriation for such a purpose is not authorized.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I reoffer the amendment with the word "entertainment" stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 20, line 20, after the figures and semicolon insert the following: "International Labor Organization $163,511.64, including not to exceed $5,901 for the expenses of participation by the United States in the meetings of the general conference and of the governing body of the International Labor Office and in such regional, industrial, or other special meetings as may be duly called by such governing body, including personal services, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, rent, traveling expenses, purchase of books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, and charts, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, hire, maintenance, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and such other expenses as may be necessary."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order with respect to other language in the amendment, such as the words "as may be necessary."

I make the point of order for the further reason that the language "and in such regional, industrial, or other special meetings as may be duly called by such governing body, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, rent, newspapers, and so forth," goes beyond the scope of what is implied in taking membership in an international body. The recitation of all these specific terms is of itself evidence that there is an attempt here to set up authority for certain specific expenses that are not included in the language of the original legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman from South Dakota is making too liberal an interpretation of the act, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk a further amendment. This takes the place of the language stricken on the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: On page 18, line 2, after the figures and the semicolon insert the following: "Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration, $20,000, including not to exceed $10,000 for the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, traveling expenses, purchase of necessary books, documents, newspapers, periodicals, maps, stationery, official cards, printing and binding, entertainment, and other necessary expenses to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the president and executive secretary of the American group."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the language is still beyond the authorization of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman be specific and point out the language he objects to in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. TABER. The words "and other necessary expenses to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the president and executive secretary of the American group."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I believe it proper, in view of the scope of the act which authorizes our participation in the Interparliamentary Union, that it be held that all of the purposes now included in the amendment are authorized. Even the word "entertainment," which was complained of in the point of order previously considered, must of necessity be included here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The act of June 28, 1935, among other things, in the second paragraph has the following language:

Such appropriation to be disbursed on vouchers to be approved by the president and the executive secretary of the American group.

Considering this language in connection with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida, the Chair is constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just offered simply does what has been done for several years by providing the money for the participation by the American group in the Interparliamentary Union.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it is unnecessary for me to take more of the time of the Committee in discussing this matter.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that the operations of this Interparliamentary Union do not serve a good purpose. I am satisfied we will get along better in our diplomatic relations with other people if we do not participate in this organization. Some of the members who attended the meeting last summer reported that they left before the proposition was over, and that they felt that the convention might better not have been held. I am satisfied that this kind of a gathering tends to interfere with regular and normal intercourse with respect to foreign affairs with other countries by setting up a group other than the State Department to have charge of our foreign matters. I think such a practice is bad, and I think it ought to be discontinued. I therefore hope the Committee will decide to save $20,000 and throw this thing out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 47, noes 44.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

WATERWAYS TREATY, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN: INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN

Salaries and expenses: For salaries and expenses, including salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the Commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State; for necessary traveling expenses, and for expenses incident to holding hearings and conferences at such places in Canada and the United States as shall be determined by the Commission or by the American Commissioners to be necessary, including traveling expense and compensation of necessary witnesses, making necessary transcript of testimony and proceedings; for cost of lawbooks, books of reference and periodicals, office equipment and supplies; and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada, and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909; $19,500, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided, That the Commissioners on the part of the United States shall serve in that capacity without additional compensation: Provided further, That traveling expenses of the American Commissioners, secretary, and necessary employees shall be allowed in accordance with the provisions of the Subsidence Expense Act of 1926, as amended (I. U. S. C. 821-833).

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: On page 28, line 10, in the parentheses, strike out the letter "I" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "5".

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is merely to correct a typographical error.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: Secretary of Commerce, Under Secretary of Commerce, Assistant Secretary, and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including the Chief Clerk and Superintendent, who shall be chief executive officer of the Department and who may be designated by the Secretary of Commerce to sign minor routine official papers and documents during the temporary absence of the Secretary, the Under Secretary, and the Assistant Secretary of the Department, $546,500: Provided, That not to exceed $100,000 of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of Commerce for personal services of experts and specialists at rates of compensation not in excess of $9,000 per annum without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the proviso beginning in line 23, of page 32, and ending in line 3, on page 35, that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the point of order is to the language beginning in line 23, of page 32, beginning with the word "Provided"?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: On page 32, beginning in line 23, strike out "$546,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$384,500."

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, may I say that when the $100,000 item goes out on a point of order, it follows that the $60,000 item involved in this paragraph for clerical hire also ought to go out along with it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing and binding: For all printing and binding for the Department of Commerce, including all of its bureaus, offices, institutions, and services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, except the Patent Office and the Bureau of the Census, $328,000: Provided, That an amount not to exceed $2,000 of this appropriation may be expended for salaries of persons detailed from the Government Printing Office for service as copy editors.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CALDWELL: Page 35, after line 3, insert a separate head as follows:

"BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the work of taking, compiling, and publishing the Sixteenth Census of the United States, as authorized by the act of June 18, 1929 (13 U. S. C. 201-218), and the national census of housing as authorized by the act of August 11, 1939 (53 Stat. 1406), and for carrying on other authorized census work, within a limit of cost for the period of July 1, 1939, to December 31, 1942, of $53,250,000, including personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the cost of transcribing State, municipal, and other records; contracts for the preparation of monographs on census subjects and other work of specialized character which cannot be accomplished through ordinary employment; per diem compensation of employees of the Department of Commerce and other departments and independent establishments of the Government who may be detailed for field work; expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the collection of statistics, when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Commerce; purchase of books of reference, periodicals, maps, newspapers, manuscripts, first-aid outfits for use in the buildings occupied by employees of the census; maintenance, operation, and repair of a passenger-carrying automobile to be used on official business; construction, purchase, exchange, or rental of punching, tabulating, sorting, and other labor-saving machines, including technical, mechanical, and other services in connection therewith; printing and binding, traveling expenses, streetcar fares, and all other contingent expenses in the District of Columbia and in the field, $17,850,000, of which $2,000,000 shall be available immediately, and the unexpended balance of the appropriation under this title in the Department of Commerce Appropriation Act, 1940, is hereby continued available until June 30, 1941.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language on page 37, beginning with the word "within", on line 17, running through the word "elsewhere", in line 20. It is legislation on an appropriation bill, increasing the limitation that now exists against the expenses of the Census Bureau, and it is unauthorized by law.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman state the particular language to which he makes the point of order?

Mr. TABER. I shall read it. It is as follows, beginning on line 17, page 37:

Within a limit of cost for the period of July 1, 1939, to December 31, 1942, of $53,250,000, including personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is well taken. It is simply an economy measure that the committee wrote in.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, it is not an economy measure. It raises the authorization $150,000 beyond all authorizations now existing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, before that is done, may I propound a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Did I understand the point of order was directed to the language—

Within a limit of cost for the period of July 1, 1939, to December 31, 1942, of $53,250,000—

The CHAIRMAN. Also the additional language—including personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the matter be reconsidered. I did not hear the reading of the language last referred to. The language "including personal services and rentals in the District of Columbia and elsewhere" is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair that might not be so, but the gentleman from New York made the point of order against the entire language, and consequently it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then I desire to propose an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have that privilege after the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York has been disposed of. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 38, line 16, strike out "$17,850,000" and insert "$15,684,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is made to save $2,166,000, which is the cost of the so-called housing census for the fiscal year 1941. That housing census is described in the hearings of the committee on pages 80, 81, 82, and part of 83. A great lot of that matter is duplication. The people of the country are up in arms against this proposal. We are getting letters by the hundreds in our office against this proposition. These census enumerators will want to know whether one has a bathtub or a shower bath, and whether you have running water within the dwelling unit or a hand pump—whether your water supply comes from more than 50 feet from the house or is within 50 feet of the house. They want to know amongst other things whether you have a toilet, whether it is a flush toilet or chemical nonflush toilet or an outside toilet or privy, and whether there is no toilet or privy. They want to know what kind of lights you have. There are about 33 major questions with an (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h) on each one. It is more of a job than the whole census. It is the most ridiculous thing that was ever put up to the American people. The whole cost of this proposition will be $8,000,000 on top of the regular census cost and it is time that the Congress got together and saved $8,000,000 of fooling money away to get nowhere. There is hardly an item that might be of any value described in this entire schedule that is not covered by the regular census. We cannot afford to go on with this kind of business. We ought to stop spending in this way, in this ill-considered way, and save a little money.

It is time that we set our heads in the direction of balancing the Budget, instead of running wild and following every scheme that the bureaucrats can evolve to spend money. The census enumerator already has a white sheet a yard long on which he has to ask questions with reference to every member of the household, and he has to give a pretty good description of the house. In addition to this, they propose to give him this proposition with 33 questions and 7 or 8 subdivisions under each of the 33 questions. He will be an hour and a half with each person that he interviews, and we will never get to the end of the annoyance you and I will be put to by our constituents if we allow this outrage to be perpetrated and let them go on and spend $8,000,000 for that performance.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. HARE. Is it the gentleman's purpose to strike out the whole appropriation for the housing census?

Mr. TABER. The whole $2,166,000 for the housing census.

Mr. HARE. I understood the gentleman to say that the housing census would cost $8,000,000.

Mr. TABER. It will cost $8,000,000. That is an estimate before the deficiency committee now for the balance of the $8,000,000 which they want to spend in the fiscal year 1940, between now and July 1. If we strike out this $2,166,000, we will probably not have to bother with striking out the other item.

Now let us start in the right direction and get rid of this $2,166,000 and not fool away money.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say that the figures are $5,125,000 for the deficiency and $2,166,000 in this bill, leaving about $700,000 short of $8,000,000.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the trouble about the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is that he did not begin soon enough to prevent this appropriation. The latter part of last session an act was passed by this Congress and approved by the President authorizing the taking of the housing census. It is contemplated to take that along in connection with the regular decennial census which is being taken. In other words, in this bill we are appropriating $2,166,000 for the purpose of taking this census which has been authorized and approved by the Congress. If we do it with the machinery that we have now, we can take the housing census at about one-fourth or one-fifth the cost that would be necessary if we did it independently and had to have a new set-up to take this census.

The principal objection of the gentleman from New York is that it asks too many questions of the party who is being interrogated. I agree with the gentleman that if we had to make up that questionnaire we would not put so many questions in it. We would make it simpler and ask fewer questions. But this proposition is simply to appropriate $2,166,000 to take this census while we are taking the general Sixteenth Census of this country. Not to do it now, I repeat, would cost us four or five times more than the cost would be if we waited until some other time to take the census.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to ask a question for information. This has been bothering me for some time. Do those who are engaged in taking the census come under the Hatch Act or not?

Mr. KERR. Well, I imagine they do. They are employees of the Government. That is simply an opinion of mine.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The Attorney General has sent an opinion to every census supervisor that has been appointed to the effect that it does apply.

Mr. HINSHAW. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. HARE. The gentleman and his committee is not responsible for the taking of the housing census?

Mr. KERR. Not at all. The Congress is responsible for it.

Mr. HARE. The only thing the gentleman has done is to provide money which was authorized by the Congress in the last session?

Mr. KERR. Yes, and following the good judgment of those who appeared before us, the paramount reasons are not only to get this information which would enlighten us in the development of our housing program, but now is the proper time to obtain this data through the organization which is now set up and functioning in the Census Bureau.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is a matter in which I am deeply interested. I believe there is a very grave misunderstanding in regard to the legislation which was passed last August. You will recall that the housing bill itself was defeated by this Congress. The census-of-housing bill was predicated upon the passage of the housing bill. The necessity for taking this census has already passed. The Census of Housing Act was comparatively simple, and you can find in it nowhere any intent or contemplation on the part of Congress to carry an impertinent inquiry into the private affairs of the homes of this country—30,000,000 homes.

I will say to you that no proposal that has been made in this country within a decade except the court-packing fight has aroused such resistance and opposition as this Housing Census Act has aroused among the American people. They resent this prying and snooping into their private affairs disclosed by the last few questions. Let me enumerate some of them:

VII. For each owner-occupied nonfarm dwelling unit:

In structures without business containing not more than four dwelling units.

28. Market value of this property:

a. Owner-occupant's estimate of the market value of this property.

b. Number of dwelling units included in this value.

29. Is there a mortgage (or land contract) on this property?

Items 30 to 33 need be enumerated only when "Yes" is entered in item 29.

30. Present amount of outstanding indebtedness:

a. On first mortgage or land contract.

b. On second mortgage and other junior liens.

31. Regular payments required on this first mortgage or land contract:

a. Frequency and amount of regular payments, including interest.

(Enter amount in 1, 2, 3, or 4; or "X" in 5 or 6.)

(1) Monthly payments of.

(2) Quarterly payments of.

(3) Semiannual payments of.

(4) Annual payments of.

(5) Other regular-payment plan.

(6) No regular payments required.

b. Do these payments include an amount for reduction of principal?

c. Do these payments include real-estate taxes?

32. What interest rate is now charged on this first mortgage or land contract?

33. Who holds this first mortgage or land contract?

a. Building and loan association.

b. Commercial bank or trust company.

c. Savings bank (mutual or stock).

d. Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

e. Life-insurance company.

f. Mortgage company.

g. Individual.

h. Other.

I have a profound respect for the Census Bureau. It has existed for 150 years. I say to you without fear of any contradiction from any of those men who have been connected with the Census Bureau that they never desired to ask the questions which appear at the latter part of the inquiries which have been sent out, which will be asked by the politically local census enumerators of the head of every household.

The regular officials of the Census Bureau did not want to include the objectionable questions, but from some source somewhere pressure was brought to bear to put in those intimate inquiries, and the people resent them. What is more, citizens are under the threat of jail sentence and fine if they fail to answer these questions and answer them truthfully.

I repeat that never since the Court fight have I been so deluged with mail as I have on this census-of-housing bill. I say to you that for the sake of preserving respect for, and the good name of, the Census Bureau this Congress itself should resist this attempt on the part of some undisclosed influence to use the Census Bureau as a snooping agency under cover of this Census of Housing Act. This House of Representatives is where we shall have to begin to stop this invasion of personal liberty. Of late there has been a tendency on the part of the departments to so construe acts of Congress as to misrepresent to the American people the real intent of Congress. Had there been read to the Congress of the United States the questions set forth in this proposed questionnaire the housing-census bill never would have passed. I hope now that you will strike out this item. Already a resolution, so I am told, has been introduced in the Senate to stop the asking of these obnoxious questions under this census-of-housing bill. Let us do our part to stop it here. I have introduced a bill to repeal this obnoxious legislation which if not repealed will cost $8,000,000 to accomplish no good purpose, aid no function of government; but which, if administered, will serve only as an irritant to the law-abiding people who still believe they have some rights of privacy in their homes and protection for their intimately personal affairs.

I appeal to you for the preservation of the good name of Congress, for the protection of the good name of the Census Bureau itself, to vote to strike out this item right here and now and help with your votes to eventually repeal the whole Census of Housing Act.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. KERR. The questions were prepared by the Director of the Census. Why does the gentleman say he was not in favor of them?

Mr. REED of New York. They are assigned to him as author, but he did not prepare them.

The asking of these questions can serve no useful purpose. It should not be carried through. These inquisitorial questions ought never to have been included and never were intended by the framers of the bill.

Mr. KERR. How did they get there if not through the officials who prepared the forms?

Mr. REED of New York. They were prepared by a board. They were ordered to include them. I am talking about the Census Bureau, not about the Department of Commerce.

Mr. KERR. Who ordered the Census Bureau to put them in there?

Mr. REED of New York. I do not know who ordered them; and, of course, I would not ask them to tell. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to excerpts from letters received from all parts of the country protesting against un-American census-of-housing program.

While I have received many protests from men in all walks of life complaining that they must, under penalty of fine or imprisonment, or both, reveal to a local census enumerator the amount of their income and other personal matters never before asked in a census, I shall first quote a few protests from women, for, after all, they have to answer these questions in the great majority of cases. One woman wrote to me as follows:

I, for one—and I believe there will be many, many thousands like me—would be very reluctant to answer these absurd and intimate questions.

Another:

This snooping into private affairs is, plainly putting it, nonsense, and should be stopped.

Another:

This is a free country. Let's keep it that way.

Another:

The New Dealers are certainly taking away our American liberties, and must be curbed now.

Another:

It is unfair for people to have to make all of their affairs public, and we have plenty of taxes now without adding another $8,000,000 to our present debt.

Another:

I beg of you to do what you can in regard to eliminating that part of the new census bill in which, under penalty of fines and jail sentences, we have to bare our very souls. When our country sinks to this degradation it is a sorry state, indeed.

Another:

Americans are still intelligent; and if the law is not changed, everyone should refuse to answer objectionable questions, taking a fine or jail sentence, if necessary, until we get results.

Another:

I sincerely believe that you have the support of every intelligent citizen of this country in your efforts to have the present census law amended and modified so that our most private affairs will not be subject to the consideration, discussion, and exploitation by any party to whom they are made available.

It is time the American people began to pay attention to what is taking place in our governmental organization before it is put upon an entirely dictatorial basis.

Another:

The April census, as the bill now stands, is an insult to every intelligent man or woman in this community. I have no objections to a Government census as conducted in the past, but I do object to this regimentation this New Deal is forcing on everyone. Before this country is entirely communistic, it is high time we take a stand. I will refuse to answer any personal questions asked by the New Deal snooper.

Another:

I frankly think the Government is stepping on the people's personal rights, and I hope that you will do all within your power to protect these rights for the people whom you represent in Congress.

Another:

You have our hearty commendation for the stand you are taking on the census. More power to you! It is a fine thing when the Government feels it has a right to pry and snoop into the affairs of a private citizen to this extent! We have always regarded it our inalienable right to conduct our affairs without such unwarranted prying, and hope you will continue to do all you can to get this matter rescinded at once. This is surely going too far.

Another:

I do object to local enumerators being given the right to question us in regards to our wages or salary or other domestic affairs of our household.

Another woman:

I object to local enumerators being given the power to do this unnecessary and unwarranted snooping.

Another:

I trust that you will not rest till the whole matter is brought before the people and the party or parties who framed these snooping questions are made known and their names held up to the contempt they deserve.

Another:

We do not care to tell all of our "personal affairs" to some local enumerator. We do not feel it is just to either fine or give us a prison sentence if we do not disclose our affairs to them.

Another:

We Americans will not stand to have our constitutional rights thrown away in this manner. And we will prove what we say next November.

Another:

Do we or don't we as American citizens have some right to our personal affairs? Or is this country of ours becoming one of a dictatorship?

Another:

Many citizens with whom I have talked strenuously disapprove of governmental snooping into their domestic affairs.

Another:

This is supposed to be a free country, but it is far from it if you have got to tell the Government through some local census taker all your personal matters. That's going too far. Stop it, for the sake of all of us.

Another:

It injures my pride in Americanism and my faith in the ability of the leaders of this country to preserve and protect our greatest rights of liberty. I don't like to feel regimented, that I am being treated as they do in foreign countries, where a human being is not an individual any more, but how can I feel otherwise? I was taught the American creed of love, honor, and respect for freedom and liberty that is so typically American. How am I going to teach that to others when someone comes along and takes away the very privacy of my life?

Another:

The insolence of the proposed questions surpasses belief, delving, as they do, into the most intimate phase of home life and financial arrangements of the family.

Another:

It is the most un-American of any ruling yet imposed upon the people by what is supposed to be a democratic government. A very sad fact about this is that few people know about it.

Another:

I think a person should be allowed a few private thoughts and business without advertising it to the community.

Another:

I, being a taxpayer in New York State, am very much opposed to the forthcoming census, being compelled by law to give all of my personal affairs.

Another:

As an American citizen I object to our Government forcing me, under threat of fine or jail term, to disclose my private affairs, even my salary or wages, to a local census enumerator. This country has always been free and we want to keep it free. We do not want a dictator in America.

Another:

It would seem we are no longer a democracy and that our personal liberty is at stake.

Another:

It is an outrageous piece of New Deal totalitarianism. It invades the individual's personal and private rights and that of the family life. I protest against this meddlesome snooping.

Another woman:

It is a snooping campaign that all to whom I have talked are denouncing bitterly. It may not be "search" in the actual fact of invasion of our homes, but it is certainly search of our private affairs, which is just as objectionable to men and women to whom freedom is the breath of life.

Referring to the legal requirement that the census answers be kept confidential, one newspaper editor remarks:

One can only say, "maybe," to that. How did John L. Lewis get confidential coal-cost data, for example?

Another editor said:

The chances are the political hack who pries into your affairs will have a great deal to gossip about. It is too much to expect all of the thousands so hastily recruited will be above that temptation.

Referring to the many letters to the editor, another editorial says:

It can be described, perhaps, as intensified realization that—almost without knowing it—the American people, under the guise of liberal reforms, are being regimented as completely as if they were living under the tightest of dictatorships.

Speaking of dictatorships, here is what one man wrote to me:

Russia and Germany are sure laughing at us. If people are going to land in jail Congress better pass a bill for more Federal jails.

Another man:

Try and repeal this thing, otherwise when the time comes you are going to find the best people in the country in trouble.

Another:

It tastes too much like dictatorship to me.

Another:

My people have fought in every war from the Revolution to the World War, and if this Government is going to take those rights away from us, by dictatorship methods as this census shows, then I and the many people around me who think the same, will have to go back to those methods our forefathers took with England.

A petition:

We, as citizens of a democratic country, feel that that the 1940 census will be a violation of our civil liberties. It promises to be a repulsive snooping into our private lives and affairs, a definite step toward Government regimentation. If the people of Germany and Russia want that sort of thing, let them have it; we don't want it.

Another man:

I am writing you to tell you how bitterly opposed I am to the housing census or this prying and snooping into private affairs. We are coming to dictatorship fast enough unless we all do what we can to prevent it.

A petition:

This is out of place in a free country which is not yet supposed to be ruled by a dictator.

From a man and wife:

If this type of law is allowed to stand we will soon be in a class with Russia—if we are not already there.

From a woman:

Let us have the freedom and rights of Americans.

A man:

I am opposed to the United States of America adopting Russian policies in putting across this census snooping.

From a woman:

It is an outrage that our administration should even contemplate such unfairness, much less to enforce it. What have our forefathers given up their lives for, to adopt Russia's form of liberty?

From a man and wife:

Let them have regimentation in Germany and Russia if that's what they want; we don't want it here.

A FEW PROTESTS FROM MEN

I never heard of or knew that the President, a bureau, the New Deal, or even Congress, could change the United States Constitution. I supposed that had to be done by the people.

Another man:

It seems to me that there is so little of the old American rights left, and from what I can gather this census taking will leave us without a private or sacred thought of our own.

Another:

The majority of American citizens have never failed their Government when necessity arrived, and never will, but the act of spreading before your neighbors all your private business is not a governmental function.

Another:

I have nothing to be ashamed of in my private affairs, but, nevertheless, I feel that when I must tell all—or else—that things have gone way too far. Everyone I have spoken to about this feels the same, except the local enumerator, and he is a ward heeler whom I would not trust to keep the affairs of others confidential.

Another:

I would like to see throughout our country such a storm wave of protests against this recent Government snooping that it will have to be repealed.

Another:

To my layman mind the plan seems an invasion of the liberties guaranteed in spirit by our Bill of Rights. Public distaste for the census as proposed will develop into resentment as enumerators press their questions. The people being questioned will not be cooperative and the resulting information may be incomplete and misleading to a large degree. Under such circumstances data obtained by this census cannot be worth the cost.

Another:

I feel that the Government has no right to pry and snoop into the personal affairs of a private American citizen and that it violates the personal security of the Constitution.

Another man:

This is about the last straw from a bunch of scatterbrained New Deal dictators.

Another:

I resent it very deeply and consider it an encroachment upon the rights of the people of the Nation.

Another:

We think it is an outrage for a local enumerator to be empowered to pry into one's private affairs.

Another:

I, for one, resent what may be a step in taking away our personal liberty.

Another:

I object to our Government forcing us, under threat of fine or imprisonment, to disclose our salary or wages to a local enumerator.

Another:

If the heads of the administration want to become dictators, why can't we ship them all to Europe and let them go to it? Whole communities will go to jail before they will allow this snooping into their business.

Another:

It is more than snooping; it is depriving us of our constitutional rights.

Another:

We have felt the injustices of the Government snooping into everything. It is not for the good of the people that all this information is demanded.

Another:

I do not intend to answer questions which are none of their business.

PETITIONS

Among the petitions which I have received is one signed by 626 out of 700 employees of one company in my district. Following are excerpts from that petition:

In the first place, we do not believe that a resident of this locality should be appointed to snoop into our personal affairs. This would be unbearable, especially in a small community, and a good many would evade correct answers, chancing a fine.

What if we did not pay as much for our home as our next-door neighbor, or have put a mortgage on it for personal reasons—should this information become public gossip?

Another petition bearing 84 names:

We feel that this census is un-American and is only paving the way to future dictatorship.

Another petition bearing 50 names:

We feel that the census as hitherto taken should be sufficient and will back you in any way possible in what you may do to stop these meddling questions.

Another petition, 156 names:

We, as taxpayers and citizens, offer our objections to the enumerators being given the right to question us as to our earnings and other domestic affairs.

A petition of 18:

We wish to express our approval of your efforts to effect repeal of the Special Census Act.

Petition of 15:

We designate you to do all in your power to take such necessary action that will repeal this bill.

Petition of 20 persons:

We object to being forced to disclose our private affairs.

Another petition of 71 signers voices this same objection.

Following are expressions of smaller groups which assembled in homes, stores, and other places:

Those in power in Washington seem to be trying as far as they dare to emulate Hitler and Stalin. This always has been a free and wonderful country, but for some time now it seems that the Government has been usurping more and more authority and has plunged the country into debt so deep it may never find its way out, and they still want to go in deeper.

Words are inadequate to express our feelings of disgust and revolt at the thought of being required to answer questions of so private a nature.

It runs counter to every tradition of our free American lives and violates directly the personal security guaranties of the Constitution itself.

All we ask is consideration and justice. No born American wants to divulge his personal affairs to the public.

A population count is necessary, but when it comes to snooping into all particulars of one's personal affairs it is most emphatically resented.

The Daughters of Union Veterans of one town wrote:

We feel that our Grand Old Army fought for freedom and we aim to maintain that blessed freedom they obtained, so kindly do what you can to repeal the special census of housing supposed to begin on April 1.

From Veterans of Foreign Wars, Tezzi-Reitz Post, No. 250, Philadelphia, Pa.:

I brought before the members of the above-captioned post the snooping attitude and the un-American methods of prying into the personal affairs of the citizens of this country by a group of political hacks who may use the information obtained for a mercenary cause and which might cause considerable embarrassment to many of our citizens. The members of this post agree with you that the present bill should be repealed and will give you whole-hearted support in your efforts to have it changed.

From an American Legion auxiliary:

The Legion auxiliary of the George Harbel Post want to join in protesting the housing census.

From a teacher of sociology in a monastery:

Laissez faire was a bad feature of individualism but national social planning can also be carried too far. Yea, even to the extent of being snoopy. And so I wish to add my voice to you in protest against certain practices of the National Census Bureau of 1940.

From a minister:

I desire to express my appreciation of your action in introducing a bill in the House concerning unnecessary and inquisitive questions in the forthcoming census.

From the head of a parochial school:

It is our sincere prayer that your bill to repeal the housing census may meet with the approval of every true American.

From a Sunday-school class—20 signers:

We vigorously object to this so-called government snooping census. As a free people we object to being regimented.

From a school faculty:

We congratulate you for position taken on census matter.

A college professor:

It looks to me as if the census is to be used as a means of getting information concerning the financial affairs of citizens which would be used as a basis for a capital levy if the present administration is retained in power or one like it elected. At the very least it will be used as a means of imposing additional local taxation upon citizens.

From a store owner:

I am just a small-store owner, but as another American, I refuse to answer the questions put to me by some political appointee.

A physician:

We do not approve of the personal clause in the census.

A businessman:

Public opinion, as I have heard it expressed in no uncertain terms, is decidedly against the personal-affairs phase of the census.

A surgeon:

I know of nothing that enrages an American any more than to have some young upstart come poking into your home to ask you how many bathrooms you have, how many windows you have, what kind of rugs on the floor, what make of kitchen stove, and a thousand other senseless questions.

An oil producer:

It seems to me that no one will seriously object to furnishing the enumerators with any kind of useful or necessary statistical information, but when it comes to incomes, etc., then it becomes just as objectionable as a previous law to make income-tax returns public documents and which, due to an aroused public sentiment, had to be thrown out the window. This is especially objectionable in view of the fact that the enumerators are, I understand, to be local residents.

A lawyer:

This is certainly a crazy scheme to spend a lot more of the people's money.

A farmer:

Let me commend you highly for introducing a bill to allow us to maintain some of the liberties to which we were once accustomed. I had made up my mind to let the census taker guess on some of the questions and have not changed it yet.

Officers and employees of a corporation:

While we agree that there is certain information to which the Government is justly entitled and should have free access to this information, there is other information requested in this new census which smacks of totalitarianism and deprives us of the privacy to which we are justly entitled.

A businessman:

We not only think this will impose on what are our own personal affairs but also a big waste of money.

President of a metal company:

The administration pretends to admire Thomas Jefferson, but acts the opposite way. It forgets that in the Declaration of Independence he put something like this: "He (King George III) has erected a multitude of new offices and sent among us swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance." It does exactly the same things.

President of a bank:

One of our women customers, who has a savings account, was in yesterday and appeared to be concerned lest the census taker would be asking how much she had in the bank, and if that question was required to be asked she proposed to draw her money out until after the census was taken.

It seems to be very unfortunate that the census could not have been taken in the usual fair and dignified manner.

Officers and employees of a bank, 29 signers:

There is a great deal of sentiment here in opposition to the questions of a very personal nature, answers to which, we understand, will be required.

A businessman:

I consider this census an invasion of my personal rights, and as a taxpayer to the extent of over $3,000 a year want to say that the millions spent in this project are a waste of money which could be used to far better advantage than to increase our already huge debt.

Another businessman:

I regard it as the duty of every American citizen to work toward the abolition of this attempt to regiment the country, and if this is not a free country I would certainly appreciate knowing it. I have numerous acquaintances who have expressed themselves as decidedly against the census in the form that it is proposed to take. We all consider this inquisitorial idea a distinct violation of our rights as American citizens and intend to resist such encroachment vigorously.

Another:

This new New Deal act is another step toward Hitlerism and, if not stopped, will lead to further aggressions on our personal liberties.

Another:

We think it is a disgrace and an insult to be subjected to such a humiliation as the census-taking law. Just what can we expect next? We—and I speak for a good many people in our community—simply cannot tolerate such an infringement on our freedom, or aren't we supposed to have it any more?

Another:

This census is an outrage on the people and, of course, the questions have been added by someone wanting to have an authority over the rights of the people.

Another:

For the last 8 years I have been trying to operate a small business. To put a climax on the rapidly increasing taxes, reports, etc., we now find that the Government is even going deeper into our personal affairs in taking the 1940 census. The sentiment toward the 1940 census is universal. There will be some well-filled jails. At least, the Government will have to take care of us for a change.

A real-estate broker:

We feel this is most un-American and one of the first steps toward regimentation—a system which many European countries suffer under at the present time. We find nothing contrary to this feeling in talking with the people of this section and feel that this is the general attitude of the community.

From the owner of a granite company:

I really didn't think that the new dealers would dare set aside what's left of the people's constitutional rights, but after draining our Treasury they have become snoopers with plans, no doubt, to drain the individual's pocket.

From a dentist:

I believe everyone in your district would appreciate it if you would do all in your power to have the census questions revised so as to eliminate a lot of the objectionable features. I need not go into any detail about this, as anybody who is informed on the matter knows that the procedure is outrageous.

From a farmer's wife:

In 5 years my taxes for schools were raised from $12.49 to $22.18, my State and county taxes from $18 to $31.18. So, if they send these people around, there will be that much more. If they want money, why not get out with a pick and shovel and earn it.

From a man and wife:

We have been acting as adults for too many years to feel that we need a paternal Government to look into our affairs in such detail as this census proposes to do.

Self-respect is still one of the fundamentals that will save the American form of government if people are not forced to lose it.

Another:

We have no objections to a population census, but believe that the $8,000,000 could be used to better advantage by a Government already deep in the red.

Another:

The new census is one of the most discreditable steps ever taken by a democratic government. It is unbelievable.

Another:

We are opposed to this special census and the accompanying expense. Let's not pass the debt on to the next fellow but assume our full share in an economy that will reduce the load.

Mr. Chairman, these protests come from law-abiding American citizens and their views are worthy of the attention of their Representatives.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there are probably several good reasons why this $2,000,000 ought not to be allowed, but all of these reasons existed less than a year ago when this act passed the House without a record vote.

It is rather amusing to see the Committee on Appropriations criticized on the one hand because they refuse to allow items to carry out the purposes of legislation approved by the Congress and on the other to be criticized for allowing funds to effectuate the purposes of such acts.

The real reason behind the opposition to this is quite natural and one we can understand—a political reason. I do not believe you need go very deeply to find what prompts the motion.

The wisdom of whether or not these housing questions should be asked is one which was decided by the Advisory Committee on the Census. I think the information sought will probably serve a useful purpose, but whether this be so or not the machinery has been set up, the forms have been printed, the census officials have been instructed to secure the data. I feel this is not the time to stop the appropriation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALDWELL. I yield.

Mr. TABER. The Director of the Census has said that not a single step has been taken, outside of the Census Bureau's getting these blanks together, to go ahead and spend money on this thing.

Mr. CALDWELL. And I may say to the gentleman from New York that I think the Director of the Census is in error, because in the State of Florida I have seen forms relating to this particular census, and the officials of the census have their instructions.

Mr. TABER. Then the gentleman did not tell us the story when he was in front of us? Is that it?

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman may draw his own conclusion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention to page 79 of the hearings. This reviews the situation. I read this portion of the hearings to you:

Let us review first the history of the Housing Census Act. It originated in the Senate at the last session of Congress, after considerable urging by Senator WAGNER and others for legislation which would permit the Bureau of the Census to take a census of housing.

In a bill which was prepared several years ago, but was not presented for enactment by the administration, the subject of housing was added by the Federal Government to the subjects to be taken in the decennial census by the Census Bureau. At that time it received the approval of the administration and the Bureau of the Budget.

Senator WAGNER introduced the present legislation April 5, 1939 (S. 2240, 76th Cong.). The Committee on Banking and Currency, to which it was referred, reported favorably, and it passed the Senate on June 23. The Census Committee reported it with amendments on July 26, and the Rules Committee recommended a special rule (H. Res. 281) on July 29. Both the rule and the bill were debated in the House on August 4, and the bill passed by a vote of 191 to 145.

The housing statistics which will be obtained under this authorization are needed both by the Government and by business. Such a census has been taken by the principal European countries for many years. England took her first census of housing in 1802, and has compiled very valuable and useful statistics.

We feel that it is a proper function of the Department of Commerce to gather these statistics for the use of other departments, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Federal Housing Administration, the United States Housing Authority, and other governmental agencies interested in housing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CALDWELL) there were—ayes 54, noes 52.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. TABER.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 59, noes 72.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read down to line 10, page 52.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAYBURN, having resumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8319) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Commerce, and Justice, and for the judiciary, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1941, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their own remarks on the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CALDWELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain census questions together with a few excerpts from letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article on the improved employment conditions in Connecticut.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article from the Washington Evening Star and a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a resolution adopted at a meeting in Chicago protesting against certain operations in Poland and in Czechoslovakia.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKEOUGH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech made by the junior Senator from Virginia, HARRY BYRD, at the laying of the keel of the U. S. S. Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DARDEN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a speech made over the N. B. C. last evening by the Honorable Leon C. Phillips, Governor of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN]?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 628)

The Chair laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I commend to the favorable consideration of the Congress the enclosed report from the Secretary of State and the accompanying draft of proposed legislation to amend section 26 (e) of the act of February 23, 1931, as amended by the act of April 24, 1939, the purpose of which is to insert additional language which has been found, in administering the aforesaid section 26 (e) as now established, to be necessary in order to carry out fully the purposes of this law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 7, 1940.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, over a period of some little time the chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], has been contributing articles to Liberty magazine. During a period when there is no committee in existence he, of course, has a perfect right to write articles or to say anything that he pleases, as has every other American citizen. I suppose all of us have that right as a general matter, but no member of this committee can dissociate himself from the committee in the public mind. At the present time, moreover, the committee is functioning, and one of the things that it has been stated the committee would undertake is an investigation of matters on the west coast and in California.

I will be glad to get to the bottom of any difficulties that there may be in my own State as well as in any other State, but in the current issue of Liberty magazine is an article written by the chairman of the Committee on Un-American Activities with reference to the situation in California. The committee very properly, I think, did not make public the report of the investigators on the west-coast matters for the reason that no hearings had yet been held regarding them. I do not propose to address myself to the substance of that article or to what is stated therein, but it appears to me that inevitably the very appearance of such an article and the expressions in that article of the chairman's point of view as to what he thinks about the situation puts the investigation in an extremely difficult situation, and makes it very hard for the course of the investigation not to be colored by opinions and statements already made and matter more or less of record.

There is at issue here the whole question of proper conduct of an investigation and therefore of the work of the committee, about which I have spoken before. It seems to me the job of the committee is to take evidence, establish facts in its hearings and through its investigation, and thereafter make a report. The time for appraisals of any situation seems to me to be after, not before, all the evidence and testimony are in. I would not be true to my own convictions about this matter if I did not protest what has happened.

[Here the gavel fell.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mrs. NORTON, for 2 weeks, on account of illness.

To Mr. BLOOM (at the request of Mr. IZAC), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MITCHELL, for 4 days, on account of illness in family.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker pro tempore:

H. R. 8067. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The Speaker pro tempore announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1157. An act for the relief of Roy D. Cook, a minor.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, February 8, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting on Thursday, February 8, 1940, at 10 a. m., before the Petroleum Subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. State regulatory bodies will be heard first.

COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on the following dates on the matters named:

Tuesday, February 13, 1940:

H. R. 1780, to amend section 7 of the act of June 19, 1886, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. III, title 46, sec. 319), relative to penalties on certain undocumented vessels and cargoes engaging in the coastwise trade or the fisheries, and for other purposes.

H. R. 5837, to amend section 221 of the Shipping Act, barring certain aliens from participating in the benefits thereof.

H. R. 6770, to amend Revised Statutes 4311 (U. S. C. 251).

H. R. 7694, to amend section 4311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

H. R. 8180, to require that not less than 75 percent of the crew of any fishing vessel of the United States be citizens of the United States.

Tuesday, February 20, 1940:

H. R. 4079, to amend sections 4353 and 4355 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

H. R. 6751, to repeal certain laws with respect to manifests and vessel permits.
